COUNCIL GIVES NEW TAXI ORD. 1ST READING

W. P. A. Men Explain Supplement Grant For Skating Rink

BRICKLAYERS ASK FOR $1 PER HOUR

Times Awarded Contract For City Official Printin For Ensuing Year

Representatives of the works progress administration appeared before the city council at its meeting on Tuesday evening explaining certain features of the question of adding a second floor to the municipal skating rink in course of construction. The time element, they stated is a very vital factor inasmuch as the request for a supplementary grant must be made, approved by the state office and also approved by the federal works progress administration. This they said will take not less than thirty days which then will leave scant time for the letting of bids for materials, etc.

Speaking about securing bricklayers for the building, the WPA representatives stated that the government allows only security wages and that therefore inasmuch as there are no bricklayers on relief and the bricklayers in this section are unionized and demand one dollar per hour, the sponsors must pay the difference. It is possible, they stated that the extra funds can be taken out of the amount allowed for materials in the present project and then to make application for a supplementary grant for the materials that then would be short. It was decided that such course will be taken.

SAVINGS MADE IN INSURANCE RATES BY CITY SCHOOLS

At a meeting of the school board of district No. 18 which was held Monday evening, February 10, a decision was made, that because of the material reduction on fire insurance rates which was made about two months ago, all fire insurance on the public school buildings should be cancelled and the insurance be rewritten over a period of five years. The plan adopted was to cancel all the present policies "short rate" and renew one-fifth for one year, one-fifth for two years, one-fifth for three years, one-fifth for four years, and one-fifth for five years. The saving brought about by re-writing on the new rates would amount to $320.00 a year.

The board also voted to purchase a slightly used 3 H. P. motor for the stoker in the Lincoln school building from the City Water & Light Department at a cost of $55.00. This motor would be used as an auxiliary motor to be used in case the regular motor needs repair. Later it will be used for the band saw in the industrial department when the department wiring is changed from D. C. current to A. C. current.

A. Skarstad and Ralph Woolhouse, who as delegates from this district attended the fifteenth annual convention of the Minnesota State School Board Association held in Minneapolis February 3, 4, and 5, gave reports on the convention activities. Reports on the work of the agricultural evening school and part-time school were also presented.

The enrollment figures for Jan. 17 show a total enrollment of 1491, which is seventeen less than at the end of the first half of last year. There are nine more enrolled in the grade schools, six less in the kindergarten, and twenty less in the high school.

Magnus Johnson Is Re-gaining Health

The 65 year old veteran of nonpartisan league battles contacted pneumonia in his hotel room where he retired after being slightly injured when run down by a car on a busy down-town street in St. Paul some time ago. He was removed to a hospital and for a time was in grave condition, being kept under an oxygen tent to save his life. The oxygen treatment is now only required for an hour or so a day, the report states.

RALSTON HOME AT GRYGLA IS BURNED FRI.

Occupants Narrowly Escape Injury Attempting to Save Belongings

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the A. D. Ralston home near Grygla on the night of Friday, February 7th. The house and contents were all consumed.

The fire was discovered by the daughter, Edith, but at that time the second floor was all ablaze. She ran to the barn to notify her father and then telephoned for help. With the assistance of the neighbors they were able to save a few articles but the fire made such rapid headway that very little could be salvaged.

Mrs. Ralston, who had been at Fargo visiting a sister arrived at Thief River Falls about a half an hour after the fire and on telephoning home was advised of the burning of her home.

Some close calls were experienced by the family as they battled the flames, Mr. Ralston being burned about the face and hands and Edith suffered some burns when her hair caught on fire. Fortunately a pail of water handy saved her life. Another daughter, Winnifred, narrowly escaped injuries when her hair ribbon caught fire as she dashed into the house to save her big doll.

The neighbors turned out for a big "Bee" the next day, fitting the granary for human occupancy, and supplying a quantity of supplies for the pantry.

No insurance was carried, it is reported.

NRS Asks Idle Men To Register Now

In anticipation of the largest employment program to be handled by the National Reemployment Service this year officials of the District Office at Thief River Falls urge all workmen seeking employment to contact the nearest NRS Office in person at their earliest convenience.

Contracts approved and awaiting approval for this district by the Bureau of Public Roads and the Works Progress Administration will exceed past construction lettings. A large percentage of these jobs will demand skilled labor.

Local Young Men Return From Auto Trip Thru South and West

Garfield Benson, Arthur Johnson, and Harry Hall of this city returned last Thursday, February 6, from a six-week's auto trip spent in motoring through to the West Coast and touring the western states visiting various parks and museums and other places of interest. They reported a fine trip with very favorable weather conditions.

Leaving Thief River Falls December 22, their route on the way out took them through Denver, Colorado and Las Vegas, Nevada, and on into California. They were unable to attend the Rose Bowl Game in Pasadena on New Year's Day, but saw the Rose Bowl Parade. The Grand Canyon and the great Boulder Dam project were among the world-famous places which they visited. In New Mexico they explored the huge crystal caves, the Carlsbad Caverns. While there they encountered snow something so rare in that section that it is considered a novelty.

On their return journey they motored through the southwestern states as far as Dallas, Texas, and then north from there.

H. P. LUND AND SONS AWARDED KRATKA JOB

County Aid No. 23 to be Gravelled with Federal Aid Funds

NOR. CHEV. CO. GETS REFUND OF TAXES

Board will Meet on Feb. 20th to Consider Age Pensions

A federal aid gravelling project which will save the county in the neighborhood of $400 was let to H. P. Lund and Sons last week when contract was made to gravel county aid road number 23 in Kratka township, from the river and north to trunk highway number one. The project which was let as a part of the federal aid of $5,040 apportioned by the state highway department to Pennington county is to cost $2240 of which the federal government will pay $1554 and the county $686 and the cost of the gravel.

The county board in meeting on February 4th, allowed for payment a judgment against the county held by the Northern Chevrolet company of this city amounting to $1341.18. The sum is in refund of taxes paid by the Northern Chevrolet company under protest in order to clear title, and had already been paid to the then sheriff O. L. Ihle who had turned it over to the county auditor H. L. Fowler instead of to the treasurer. The sum is a part of the defalcations for which Mr. Fowler was convicted last year.

The county board will hold a special meeting on Thursday, February 20th to consider old age pensions procedure. It is expected that the forms and other data from the state board of health which is in charge of the state pension set-up will have been received by that time.

Weather Continues Cold and Stormy

The promised break in the cold wave on the 8th was short lived. With the rising temperature of Saturday morning, considerable snow fell, and by evening a healthy northwesterner was raging. The temperature started falling with sundown and Sunday was again bitter cold with roads generally blocked thruout the entire territory. The highway snowplow crews have been kept busy night and day thruout the entire week and Wednesday evening the roads were again well cleared.

Minimum temepartures for the week are as follows: Feb. 6, —40; Feb. 7, —37; Feb. 8, —14; Feb. 9, —7; Feb. 10, —30; Feb. 11, —32; Feb. 12, —35; Feb. 13, —14.

Special Session Laws Are with this Issue

The laws of the special session recently adjourned are included with this issue of the Forum as a supplement.

Of foremost importance perhaps, is the new old age pension law which will be found on page 6 of the supplement, in the sixth column. The new personal property tax law will be found on page 4, column eight.

In spite of the fact that the session generally has the reputation of having accomplished less than most of its predecessors, there were 207 acts passed and approved by the governor.

CO-OP CREAMERY REPORT SHOWS SPLENDID GAIN

Anton and Kaushagen Members Re-elected As Directors For Three Years

A harmonious, enthusiastic meeting, contrasting vividly with the fireworks of last year was held by the Thief River Farmers Co-operative creamery at the Civic and Commerce rooms in the city auditorium on Monday afternoon.

The manager's report showed an exceptional increase in business during the past year. The volume for the past three years was as follows: 1933 butter output, 316,049 lbs; 1934 output, 417,642 lbs; and 1935 output, 481,807 lbs.

The creamery paid an average of 31.0 cents per pound for sweet cream butterfat delivered at the creamery and made a total of 388,636 of butter. Of this amount, 208,434 pounds were LO'L grade and 160,849 pounds shipped was undergrade. 100,686 pounds were sold locally and 11,875 pounds were sold to patrons.

The percentage of over-run was 23.97, the average net price received for butter manufactured was 26.54 cents per pound. The manufacturing and general expense cost of manufacture was 3.03 cents per pound.

The net income from dairy products during the year was $1,835.29 and income from other sources was $345.29, making a total net income available for distribution or surplus of $2,029.34.

Liabilities have been reduced during the past year and the interest has been reduced from six percent to four percent on the balance thru a re-financing of the debt. The report of the manager Mr. Bergland was enthusiastically received and a large gain is anticipated for the coming year. To prove the reasonableness of such a prediction, Mr. Bergland cited that the volume for January 1936 was 12,000 pounds over the volume of January 1935.

On ballotting for directors for three years the following were nominated: Hans Anton and Henry Kaushagen, incumbents, and L. O. Stenseth and Gordon Olson. Mr. Anton and Mr. Kaushagen were reelected with substantial majorities. Lunch and cigars were served after the meeting adjourned.

— TO THE PUBLIC —

With this issue the Forum, which has up to this time been published by R. M. Aalbu, individually, now passes into the hands of the Forum Publishing Company, a corporation, and will hereafter be known as the TRI-COUNTY FORUM. The Forum Publishing Company is a co-operative association composed of people from Pennington, Red Lake and Marshall Counties and other parts of the state. The paper being extensively circulated in all three counties it seems to us most appropriate that it should be known by the name of the Tri-County Forum.

We feel that the Forum has a place to fill in this community. That is why we have taken over the paper and made it a co-operative community newspaper. Our aim will be first of all to publish an up-to-date newspaper giving all the news fairly and accurately, but at the same time we shall endeavor to get out a paper that will be expressive of the economic and political ideals and principles of the rank and file of the people of this part of the state. We believe in co-operation, and will always be glad to do what we can to support the co-operative movement. Politically our stand is quite well known, and nothing need be said except that we shall continue to support progressive principles.

We want the Tri-County Forum to serve as a friendly community newspaper, always ready to boost for this part of the state to the best of its ability. The success of this community will be our success. To the Times, our neighbor down the street, we want to extend the fraternal hand, good will and friendship. We feel that there is room enough here for both newspapers.

The stockholders of this paper live in this territory, and are going to continue to live here, and to do business in Thief River Falls and nearby towns. We trust that the merchants and business men of Thief River Falls and surrounding towns will favor us with a fair share of whatever advertising and other business they may have to distribute along our line.

With these brief words of introduction we present to you the Tri-County Forum, and hope that you will like the paper and our policies, and find them worthy of your support.

Respectfully yours,

Gov. Olson in Fine Fettle; To Campaign

Governor Olson will return to his office next Monday, according to reports received by his staff this week.

The governor's physicians have informed him that a series of treatments given for his stomach ailment are proceeding satisfactorily and that if additional treatments are needed later he will make trips back to the Mayo clinic at Rochester.

In a statement to the public authorized by the governor, Hjalmar Peterson, lieutenant governor, stated last week that Olson is looking fine and appears to be in better health than he has for years. He stated that he fully expects to enter the campaign this year and it will not be a radio campaign. From the first of September on, the governor has stated, he will be in the field, stumping the states.

REV. JOHN FLINT THRILLS LARGE CROWD FRIDAY

Increased Attendance Is Noted At the Sons of Norway Lecture Course

Rev. John Flint, of Underwood, Minnesota appearing in the second of a series of lectures at the Sons of Norway hall last Friday evening spoke on the "Moral Values of the Old Nordic Faith". A large increase in attendance was noted and the audience listening intently manifested a keen interest in the discourse.

Rev. Flint explained the symbolisms of the old Nordic mythology and pointed out the high moral consciousness of the Nordic race. Their philosophy was founded upon justice and courage, Rev. Flint stated and as a result the Nordic race because of its love of justice, liberty and courage has led in application of democratic ideals which are a distinct Nordic contribution to modern civilization.

Rev. Flint has the faculty of leading up his arguments in a quiet, sincere manner, using a few well-chosen gestures, to the climax and then driving his point home with a burst of eloquence. He is a rapid fire speaker and has an exceptional command of the English language. A fact which made him somewhat difficult for the less informed of his listeners to follow.

The next lecturer on the program is Mayor John Queens of Winnipeg, the committee has announced. He will appear here on the 6th of March.

St. Paul Writer Scores Marius Waldal's Attack on Gov. Olson

A. I. Harris

Because he attacked uncompromisingly those vested interests who ruled and plundered our state for many years, Governor Olson has been subjected to more vicious criticism and downright abuse than any other executive in the United States. He took this criticism as a matter of course, smilingly, philosophically, always going back into the affray with more determination than ever to carry out the pledges he made to the people. . . .

The Governor's newspaper critics have been many and resourceful - with all the power behind them that money can command. But none of these critics ever felt nor does he feel today - any physical jeopardy involved in attacking Olson. Matter of fact, an eastern newspaperman visiting here, reading some of the poisoned stories sent out for "foreign" consumption, expressed amazement that it could be conducted on such large a scale with perfect immunity. "It couldn't be done in my state," he remarked. . . .

The fact is indisputable that no important critic of the Governor was ever molested, much less harmed, in pursuing his game, at times outrageously unsportsmanlike. It was an open season, and nobody attempted to close it or restrict it. . . .

No matter what one might think of the type of yellow journalism indulged in by the late Walter W. Liggett - and the Minneapolis Journal said editorially that it did the city of Minneapolis no credit - this writer and every decent citizen of the state were shocked by his brutal slaying, which was a challenge on the part of gangland not only to freedom of the press and to the right of free speech, but to organized society itself. . . ,

It is unfortunate, however - and will injure rather than aid a solution of the murder - that political enemies, the hirelings of the moneyed 'plunderbound' of the state, have maliciously, criminally, injected the Governor's name in the case because Liggett at the time was attacking Olson. One can almost forgive a widow for doing this, her mind muddled by the terrible sight of witnessing her husband shot down in cold blood. But the people of this state will never forgive the diobolic politicians and political scandalmongers who are spreading this libel by word of mouth and thru a subservient press for their own selfish purposes. . . .

There has been much said about the rehashed charges made by Liggett against Governor Olson, to lend force and effect to the vile insinuations. The writer is quite familiar with them, and with their falsity. To say that Olson feared them is the worst kind of tommyrot . . . .

During the last regular session of the Legislature, the reactionaries ordered an investigation of these same charges . . . and one was had. It was headed by Senator James A. Carley. The committee hired investigators who followed persons and snooped into private matters. No piece of gossip, no matter of how intimate a nature it was, failed to escape the attention of these stool pigeons, bent on blackening the Governor's character. Its unfairness and prejudice was so manifest that its stench reached to high heaven. Reactionary leaders, led to believe, before the investigation, that those who preferred the charges had actual evidence to sustain them, became frantic at the failure of the investigating committee to produce this evidence . . . .

Will Senator Carley deny that Liggett was called in to aid the committee? He was. Matter of fact, he was in almost daily secret conferences with Thomas Mouer, attorney and chief muckraker for the committee. If Mouer was impressed by the facts in Liggett's possession, they certainly would have been presented at the committee hearings. The claim that these reactionaries made a "deal" with Governor Olson to protect his good name is one which can be presented only to a class of feeble-minded . . . .

The writer of this column was served with a subpoena on two occasions to appear before the investigating committee. The committee chairman stated to the press that he wanted the writer for examination and kept him under subpoena so he couldn't take a "vacation" to Florida or California or elsewhere. . . .

BUT THE WRITER NEVER WAS CALLED! Knowing something about the purposes underlying the investigation, and the plans made for it by certain controlling groups even before the Legislature convened, the writer asked both Carley and Mouer for the privilege of testifying. When it became apparent to him that the committee did not want to examine him the writer demanded in writing that he be called, but his entreaties fell on deaf ears. The committee wanted to hear only those witnesses who would testify as they wanted them to testify.

And now comes Representative Marius Waldal, who holds office not by the grace of the voters of his district but by the grace of a reactionary House, with the amazing declaration that some members of the Legislature were planning impeachment proceedings against Governor Olson if a new investigation proposed by him would warrant it, but that they were dissuaded from this course because it "would cost too much money and would take too much time." . . . .

And these are the paid servants of the public! What a startling confession for one to make! If the charges were true, then any amount of money on the part of the state would have been an investment well worth it. And why should it take so long to investigate charges when the evidence, as is claimed, is safely rolled up in little bundles and carefully hid in some safety deposit vault so that "Olson's Gang," whoever they are, can not steal it? . . . .

We have no doubt but that the reactionary majority in both the Senate and House would have liked to impeach Governor Olson. They would cast their votes, if they could get away with it, with more relish than they would consume a sirloin steak dinner, with the steel trust footing the bill. If Waldal's statement bears even a close resemblance to the truth, then these reactionaries are not only faithless to the public trust, but renegades and cowards as well.

Oslo, Norway Will Be Sunday School Convention City

Sunday School workers from nearly every country in the world, and from all Protestant Evangelical Denominations, will attend the Twelfth World's Sunday School Convention to he held at Oslo, Norway, July 6-12, 1936.

We are very happy to be able to relate that our Country's King, His Majesty Haakon VII, has promised to act as the Convention's guardian."

The theme, "Christ the Hope of the World" has been chosen for the convention. Eminent churchmen and outstanding Christian statesmen have accepted places on the program. Every phase of the program of Christian Education will be considered.

The convention is held under the auspices of the World's Sunday School Association, with headquarters in New York City. Dr. Robert M. Hopkins is the General Secretary. Dr. Hopkins was on the program of the Minnesota State Sunday School convention at Redwood Falls on October 24th and 25th, 1936.

Minnesota has a quota of 50 delegates for the Oslo Convention. The delegation is being secured thru the Minnesota Council of Religious Education with Headquarters at 405 Oppenheim Building, St. Paul, H. L. Stright, General Secretary.

Information concerning the Convention may be secured from the office of the Minnesota Council of Religious Education.

Cattle on Feed Increased 40% In Corn States

Going from one extreme to another, the corn belt is full tilt in the cattle feeding business following a year of light feeding due to short crops in 1934. The percentage increase in feeding this year over last year is the largest ever shown in the 14 years for which records have been kept, contrasted with the greatest decrease ever shown from January 1, 1934 to January 1, 1935.

The number of cattle on feed for market in the eleven corn belt states on January 1, this year, was 41 percent larger than the very small number on feed a year ago, according to statistics gathered by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Despite the sharp increase in feeding over last year, the estimated number of cattle on feed now is still materially below the average for January 1 for the period from 1930 to 1934. The number of cattle on feed at present is around 25 to 30 percent below the five-year average for Jan. 1.

Reports from Corn Belt feeders regarding the weights of cattle indicate that there is a larger proportion of heavier feeders in the country and a decreased proportion of calves on feed.

As to the probable months of marketing the cattle on feed this year, reports indicate that a larger proportion of the total will be marketed before May 1 than a year ago.

Slaughter supplies of cattle during the next few months are expected to reflect an increase in feeding and, although slaughter is expected to be smaller than last year, the proportion of feed cattle is expected to be materially larger, with the great bulk of these cattle being medium to good steers. The reduced supply of cows and low grade steers is expected to support prices of common steers and most butcher stock, the prices of which will probably strengthen.

More than 500 pastors from the Protestant Churches of Minnesota are expected to attend the Fourth State Pastors Conference at Wesley Methodist Church, Minneapolis on February 17-18-19. The invitation to attend the conference has gone to 2,000 pastors, and in addition, to all ministerial students in the Seminaries of Minnesota.

Many phases of the theme "The Minister's Share in Building a Christian World", will be considered. Addresses will be given by Toyohiko Kagawa, Christian evangelist of Japan; Dr. E. W. Praetorius, Bishop of the Northwestern Area of the Evangelical Church, St. Paul; Dr. Harold Cooke Phillips, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Cleveland; Dr. Paul E. Sherer, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Holy Trinity of New York City, and the Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart D. D., Bishop of the diocese of Chicago of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Chicago.

The devotional services and the discussion groups will be led by prominent Minnesota clergymen. In addition to music by Minneapolis Church Choirs, the conference music will include music by Miss Hope Hauzel, harpist.

The conference is being entertained by the Minneapolis Ministers Federation of which Dr. Bertram B. Hanscom, pastor of the Park Avenue Congregational Church is the chairman.

The conference is open to all ministers and to ministerial students. The Monday afternoon session will be open to laymen outside of the Twin Cities only. The Tuesday evening session will be open to the public. Admission will be charged for the two open sessions.

The conference opens at two o'clock Monday afternoon, February 17th and closes at noon Wednesday, February 19th.

The Conference is promoted by a Volunteer Committee composed of unofficial representatives from more than twenty denominations and communions and five interdenominational agencies. The chairman of the Volunteer Committee for the 1936 conference is the Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Minnesota Diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Minneapolis.

Electrification Co-ops From New Agency

Northwest Rural Electric Cooperatives Form Central Organization

Representatives of over 25 counties and about 20 rural electrification cooperatives in Minnesota and Wisconsin met January 25 at Minneapolis, Minnesota, and organized the Federated Electric Cooperative, an organization which will act as a central agency for rural electric cooperatives in the central Northwest, through which they may secure expert engineering, financial, auditing and other services. It will also act as central purchasing agent for such materials as the various members may need.

The organization of the Federated Electric Cooperative climaxes many months of activity on the part of individuals throughout this area in setting up co-operative associations for rural electrification. Several of these associations have already made application to the R. E. A. in Washington for funds wherewith to build their lines to furnish electricity to farm homes. It is estimated that $6,000,000 will be loaned for this purpose in Minnesota alone.

A previous meeting held in the middle of November, at which 25 local electric groups were represented, set up a preliminary committee to direct the rural electrification activity. This committee has been active during the intervening period, and partially as a result of its work there are now nearly twenty cooperative electric associations incorporated in the area represented, and many more are in the early stages of organization. The Federated Electric Cooperative is incorporating under Minnesota Cooperative Laws, with the following Board of Directors to serve until the first annual meeting in June: Henry T. Johnson, Audubon, Minnesota, president; E. F. Luehr, Spring Grove, Minnesota, vice president; Paul Ferguson, Jackson, Minnesota, secretary; Wm. Onkka, Cokato, Minnesota, treasurer; David Anderson, Moose Lake, Minnesota, director.

The headquarters of the new cooperative will be located for the time being at the Midland Cooperative Wholesale plant at 739 Johnson Street N. E., Minneapolis, Minnesota. The articles approved by the meeting call for incorporation February 1. The rural electric cooperative associations will be members of the central organization on a strictly cooperative basis.

It was the unanimous opinion of the representatives of rural associations present at the meeting that a central agency is necessary for the proper development of cooperative rural electrification in this area. It was pointed out at the meeting that such a central agency would be able to serve the consumer members much better and at a lower cost in such matters as engineering services required both before and after construction, bargaining for wholesale power, and accounting, auditing, legal and educational work.

Central cooperative electric associations of this type have already been established in Indiana and Ohio, where many cooperative projects have been approved and some have already started construction.

RABBIT IMPRISONED BY TOUCHING TONGUE ON AXE

Sauk Center—Years ago, before most home waterworks had been installed, it was not an uncommon thing to chronicle the story of some young lad who was too curious and tested the cold by placing his tongue on the pump handle. Sometimes the tongue was removed with the loss of only a bit of skin, but other times half the tongue came off or it was necessary to thaw the youngster from his "attraction" by the use of hot water from the working end of the pump. Altho the principle is the same, this is a story of a rabbit, instead of a human, who suffered the same tragedy. James Christie left his axe near a pile of wood one evening near Sauk Center. When he returned the next morning he saw rabbit tracks around the head of the axe, and found that the bunny, as so many curious little boys had done in the past, had placed his tongue on the axe head. The severe cold weather made it impossible for the rabbit to loosen its tongue, and Christie found it there, minus the little cottontail, which most likely died in the woods minus its power of speech.

BOY'S LIFE SAVED WHEN ROAD PLOW PILES UP SNOW

Zumbro Falls—Buried in the snow beneath an over-turned car, an 11 year old boy probably escaped death or serious injury because the highway plow had piled snow in the ditch a minute before. Kenneth Atkinson and his brother Merele were standing beside the road waiting for their father, who was to take them to Zumbro Falls. The snow plow passed them, throwing a high, soft bank of snow to the side of the road. Immediately after, a car driven by a Lake City man at a high rate of speed dodged the plow and struck Kenneth as the car went into the ditch. The car was lifted and the boy dug out of the snow. He escaped with only minor injuries.

EDITORIALS

By R. M. AALBU

Last week the writer disposed of his interests as publisher of the Forum to the newly organized co-operative association but will continue for the time being as editor.

In turning over the responsibility for the publication of the paper to others, I wish to thank the public and my many friends for the loyal support they have given me and the thousand and one favors they have done in assisting me in carrying on the publication of the paper against what seemed many times to be insurmountable obstacles. Without their help it could not have been done. The friends I have gained will always be cherished.

In retaining me as editor of the paper, the board of directors have attached no strings, believing as they do in the constitutional rights of free speech and free press. However, neither do they necessarily agree with everything that I may say in this column. Such opinions as are expressed here are my own except when they may be signed by others or otherwise accredited.

AN ENTERPRISE THAT SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED

The Sons and Daughters of Norway are to be congratulated upon their initiative in sponsoring the Winter Lecture course, the second program of which was presented last Friday evening at their hall. The value to a community of high class, educational and entertaining lectures can not be ovestimated and it is to be hoped that the increase which was noted in attendance Friday evening will continue until the hall is packed to the doors.

Reverend Flint's lecture Friday evening like the one delivered by Professor Beck about a month ago was not only instructive but also exceedingly interesting. The lecture course committee has announced that Mayor John Queens of Winnipeg will be the next lecturer on the program, appearing here on March 6th. Everyone who has heard Mayor Queens are agreed that he is an able and interesting speaker.

OLSON PUTS McCORMICK IN HIS PLACE

The attacks that Bertie McCormick of the Chicago Tribune has made upon the state administration, and upon the press of the state received a well deserved rebuke from Governor Floyd B. Olson this week. The governor reminds McCormick that his own city has been the worlds worst cesspool of crime and that McCormick's own paper suppressed the facts with regard to the dysentery epidemic prevalent in Chicago during the world's fair there. The governor refers to Mr. McCormick as a "journalistic charlatan", an appelation which seems to be well deserved as Mr. McCormick's attempted reply indicates. Mr. McCormick said: "If Governor Olson is cleared of the Liggett murder I'll reply to his charges that I am a fakir and journalistic charlatan." Chicago must be more benighted than we had imagined. For Mr. McCormick's information, we might state that no charges have been preferred against Governor Olson having any even remote connection with the Liggett murder. We might also state that eye witnesses have accused a Minneapolis underworld character, Kid Cann, and he is now on trial. Mr. McCormick is evidently not only a journalistic charlatan but the world's most artful dodger as well.

CO-OPERATIVES GET A BOOST FROM AN UNEXPECTED SOURCE

An admission that is to say the least startling when one considers where it comes from is contained in a recent Industrial News bulletin. Says the bulletin: "The co-operative marketing idea is entirely non-political and non-partisan. It is not the product of politics—instead it is the Product of Natural Economic Forces. It represents an inevitable evolutionary process. It Has Proven Its Soundness Thru Years of Depression, and the Movement has Grown in the Face of the Greatest Obstacles. When Farmers get Together to Solve Their own Problems thru Central Management, They are not Pursuing some Transitory "Farm Relief Scheme—They are Using Their Intelligence to Reach a goal that is Beneficial to all Concerned—Producers and Consumers Alike."

It is refreshing to find that even the class that a few years ago maintained that farmers could not carry on any business except that of "slopping the hogs" are now admitting that farmers are capable of carrying on their own marketing. The world moves evidently. We shall soon find them admitting that flour mills, steel mills, and other industry that is carried on by private monopoly can be successfully handled thru the co-operative method, to the benefit of "producers and consumers alike."

A WARNING

Land O'Lakes News

Farmers following advice and leadership as to the course to pursue with respect to the development of co-operative marketing as it applies to the actual merchandising of farm products should bear in mind that they are furthering the chance of what is the ultimate ambition of distributors, to own both the distribution and manufacturing units that deal with the purchase and sale of farm products.

We know of creameries that withdraw from their marketing organizations and sell their butter to some large distributor and, at the same time, find the distributor to whom they are selling competing with their very creameries for cream from their farmers. Creameries should take warning in the direction of their marketing problems and, if they cannot support a central co-operative marketing organization, they should ask their buyers to at least withdraw from the business of concentration and manufacture of dairy products in competition with them. Most large distributors are both manufacturers and distributors. Farmers need strong co-operative marketing organizations through which to build for future stability of their local co-operative institutions.

We know of a number of instances where creameries have withdrawn their membership from the Land O'Lakes Creameries and, at the same time, are selling to the very concern that owns the cream station in their own town, buying in competition with them.

THE PACKERS GET THE MONEY

Minnesota Union Advocate, St. Paul

When Henry Wallace, secretary of agriculture, and his brain trust evolved the brilliant idea of killing off a few million baby pigs to cut down the supply in order to boost the price of pork, it was the big packers who did the killing, the packing and the canning of fertilizer. They got the cream of the hog crop at their own price; the government paid them for processing the baby pigs, and when the processing taxes went on—they added the tax to the price of pork.

Then the supreme court declared the AAA null, void and unconstitutional, and ordered the government to return something like $200,000,000 in processing taxes impounded in various federal courts. The big packing companies are now going to sue for the return of every dollar paid to the government in the form of a processing tax.

In view of the fact that the processing taxes were passed on to the public, every dollar returned to the packers under the decision of the supreme court represents just so much velvet. Of course the packers will have to pay income tax on these net profits, but they can afford to give the U. S. treasury a few hundred thousand dollars of the millions Uncle Sam told them to filch out of the sucker public.

HONOR JUSTLY PLACED

Askov American

The northwest in general, and North Dakota in particular, have been given signal publicity by United States Senator Gerald P. Nye in his energetic work in the national Congress and for world peace. His selection as receiver of the Cardinal Newman award for 1935 has just been announced. The honor established as "outstanding contributions to the enrichment of human life and science, literature, art, humanitarianism, and government" was announced for Senator Nye as an award for his "courage and insight" in exposing the "hidden factors which make for war." The award will be conferred upon the Senator within a month at a public convocation at the Newman Foundation at University of Illinois.

Senator Nye, as chairman of the Munitions Investigation committee of the United State Senate, has uncovered such hidden information as to the manipulations of the big international bankers and munition makers, which will be valuable in shaping anti-war legislation in the future. He has been a militant fighter for neutrality legislation and is a constant worker in behalf of the masses of people.

"RULE OR RUIN"

Minnesota Leader

A. C. Townley has edged his way back into the Farmer-Labor picture in Minnesota. His speech at the Fergus Falls meeting last Saturday indicates clearly his disposition to attempt to gain a hold on the party, which he deserted in 1934 in order to run as an independent candidate for governor.

While Mr. Townley talks about "cliques dominating the party," it is apparent that his grievance is that he is not in control. The former "Boss" of the Nonpartisan League is by nature an autocrat and constituted in himself the only clique of consequence in the League. He just can't stomach domination of the movement by anyone else, including the Farmer-Labor Association.

It is a pity that this once useful figure in the progressive cause should have completely destroyed his usefulness. He is clearly out of the picture and it is well that those with a grievance do not launch their campaigns under his auspices. If they do, we predict they will have cause to regret it.

DRY LAW RETURNING

The National Voice

A mighty good friend, and one who is about as wet as they make them, predicts prohibition will soon be back among us with renewed strength, says the Grand Rapids Herald. He went to Chicago the other day, walked into the barroom of a hotel, and says he couldn't get up to the bar at all because of the crowd of women there. Because they must sit while they drink, they have arranged double rows of stools in front of the bar. He says all these stools were filled largely with women, smoking cigarets, drinking and some indulging in plenty of noise, as if they had had already about a drink or so too many.

"I'm opposed to prohibition, always opposed to it," he says, "but we'll have it back with renewed strength before long if this sort of thing is permitted to continue. I was pretty much disgusted myself, and that's something."

CONGRESS SHOULD HAVE POWER TO ISSUE CURRENCY

Freeborn Patriot, Albert Lea

The present attempt of Father Coughlin to bring about a test case to try the constitutionality of the Federal Reserve Act, and also Father Coughlin's claim that the power to issue currency should lie only in the hands of the Congress of the United States, bring back memories of when P. A. Peterson of Mansfield township was state representative from this district. Mr. Peterson made the same suggestion a part of his campaign issue, and when he became representative the second time, he succeeded in getting the state legislature of Minnesota to memorialize congress to that effect. Among others who have opposed the Federal Reserve Act and declared it to be unconstitutional were Senator Brookhart of Iowa, Senator Shipstead, former Senator Magnus Johnson, and Senator Norris of Nebraska.

IT IS STILL TIME, ELECTION IS NOT TILL NOVEMBER 10

Scores of people have lost their lives and the rest of us have had to expend millions of dollars to keep from freezing to death during the cold wave, but as yet we have not heard anyone blame Governor Olson for having "ordered or permitted it." Someone should tip the Orator of Emardville off.

Political Action Is the Correct Line

By Chas. D. Egley, Mgr.
Farmers Union Live Stock Commission, So. St. Paul, Minn., and W. Fargo, N. D.

For the past three years we have sent out to farmers, mostly in Minnesota, several hundred thousand circular letters in which we briefly outlined our views with reference to economic conditions, and then asked these farmers to answer a number of questions on the back of this letter, giving their views on this subject, and send the answers back to us here at So. St. Paul.

The question which I felt most important, and on which I was most anxious to get the views of farmers follows: What do you think is the right thing to do to correct the rotten economic conditions now prevailing?

And by far the most of the answers received were something like the following: "Kick the grafters out of public office. Elect honest men. Pass this kind of a law or that." In other words by far the most of the people seem to look to "political action" as the solution of our problems.

I think all of us will agree that we are living in a scientific age when plenty is possible for all, if we only produce to our full capacity and then have the proper kind of a system of distribution. But I can't agree that this is a problem of "political action" at all. To me it seems to be just a problem of simple economics.

In other words, to me it doesn't seem to be a matter of "passing a law" at all, but entirely a matter of where you do your business. If you do your business with those who are a part of the capitalist system, which is based on private ownership and private profit of the means of production and distribution collectively used, wealth just naturally is going to continue to concentrate in the hands of the few.

But if you would quit doing business with the private owners, start building and doing business with your own institutions, operated on the cooperative plan, where patronage dividends instead of stock dividends are paid, the accumlated wealth at the end of each year will be decentralized, increasing consumer purchasing power, making it possible for the producers (farmers and workers) to buy back as much as they produce, and consume and enjoy so-called surpluses instead of having them pile up in cold storage houses where people who need them cannot get at them.

You don't have to have any law to do that. All you have to have is a little common horse sense. One man writes me: "You can't build a new social order based on the principles of cooperation without changing the constitution." Bunk! In order to do business with yourself, with your own institutions, you don't have to monkey with the constitution at all. Just step into your own business institution, and do your business there.

And then another man writes me that what I am advocating is Socialism. He intimates that's bad. I don't know, I haven't see it work. I have seen the Capitalist system work, and I known durn well that's not good. But I deny that I have been advocating Socialism. All I have been advocating is cooperation. And a lot of it.

However, if advocating and helping to build hundreds of livestock shipping association is Socialism, I guess I have to admit the charge. If advocating the building of farmers' elevators and operating them on basic cooperative principles is Socialism, I guess I am it. If advocating the operation of cooperative creameries, poultry associations, livestock and grain commission selling agencies, packing houses, stores, wholesales, bulk I guess I am it.

But if I know anything at all about these things there is an awful big difference between operating the cooperative commonwealth through economic organization as compared with political action. And the only thing that I have ever advocated is economic organization. Lots of it. I say we must go all the way and abolish the capitalist system, with its private profit, if we are to abolish exploitation, and do all business cooperatively that we use collectively.

However, with reference to political action I will say that it looks mighty foolish to me for a man who believes in cooperation to vote for a man who does not. It looks mighty foolish to me for a man who believes in collective ownership to vote for a man who believes in private ownership. It looks mighty foolish to me for a men who believes in patronage dividends to vote for a man who believes in stock dividends.

Do you think such a man, after being elected, will help pass laws that will help your cooperative movement. That will help you build the new social order based on the principles of cooperation? Let's be practical about these things, and use both of the peaceable means at our disposal—economic organization and political action—to bring about a new economic system where plenty for all is possible.

If we hoven't got sense enough to do that, history will repeat itself, and we'll try to do it the dumb way—through revolution when the oppression becomes unbearable. And if we haven't got sense enough to vote right, and do our business at the right place, I am afraid we won't have sense enough to shoot the right people.

What's the good of revolution, if after the revolution we go right on with the same economic system? If tafer the revolution we haven't got sense enough to build a social order where there is no exploitation? Summed up in a nut shell, no matter what policy we follow, it will take brains; it will take a much better understanding among the rank and file of the common people regarding economics; the effect of political action of various and sundry kind of the economic system, before we have an economic system where exploitation is abolished, and the potential plenty now possible can be enjoyed by all.

THE SLAUGHTER CONTINUES.

Do you know, that according to the statistics of an insurance company the driver of every twentieth car in the United States will kill a man, woman, or child sometime during this year if automobile fatalities accord with last year. The editor of the "Christian Century" has stated.

"Reports from cities in many parts of the country, compiled at the end of June, shows that the slaughter of Americans by the automobile continues. Months ago the country was horrified when it learned that 36,000 persons lost their lives in automobile accidents in the United States during 1934, while more than a million were injured. Civic clubs, insurance companies, newspapers and all sorts of agencies immediately launched a campaign to end this massacre. There have been few Americans who have not found themselves exposed in some fashion to this automobile safety drive during the past six months.

"There is point in asking why, in the face of this horror, the agitation for safety continues to say so little about two factors which obviously play an important part in keeping up the slaughter. Liquor and the over-engined car—why is so little being said about them? Can it be that the millions now being spent on automobile and liquor advertising has any influence on this strange reticence in the press? But how long can any paper or any organization which is pretending to campaign for safety keep up that bluff if this silence is maintained?

BIRD'S FEET FREEZE TO PERCH ON WELL PIPE

Isle—When Elvin Andrews of south of Onamia was doing the chores recently, he saw a chickadee sitting on the iron pipe at the well. It seemed to be extremely tame and did not move when he went up to it, and he discovered that its feet were frozen to the pipe. A little cold water loosened the bird and it fluttered away, probably wishing that Santa Claus had left it some wool socks and overshoes.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

Man's allotted years are three score years and ten.

If he makes the best use of the years, he will have fulfilled his mission.

Mistakes in judgment will be made but these can be forgiven if the fundamental lessons of experience are not ignored.

The great tragedy is to go thru life and ignore the fundamental lessons of experience. The secret of happiness is found in heeding early in life the sting or joy of experience.

We see,k, yet so often fail to find—Happiness or, in other words, peace.

Let a man put his personality into his task, filling it with moral earnestness, and staying to duty at all cost, then happiness will come out to join him on his journey and his mind will joy with peace.

Influence is another great quest.

Whoever doeth his duty and responds to the higher calls within grows the charatcer that gives influence and happiness, and is fulfilling life's mission.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

What Abe Thought of the Supreme Court

Abe Lincoln, whose birthday some of us celebrate this week, said something about the Supreme Court on the occasion of the Dred Scott decision which might apply to them after certain other dreadful decisions suffered recently: "The Supreme Court (he said) has got the doctrine of popular sovereignty down as thin as homeopathic soup that was made by boiling the shadow of a pigeon that had starved to death."

The Brain-Fever Birds

A traveler in the Sudan in Africa tells of a jungle-bird which gives the natives the jitters by monotonously repeating a certain call. They dubbed it the "brain-fever bird."

It seems to me that this is a good name for those birds who continually view this or that with alarm, or produce ANOTHER cure for the depression. Democrats spout all over the pages of the daily newspapers, in defense of the New Deal; Republicans gird themselves with holy fervor, crusading as the saviors of the people, and point out the reckless spending of F. D. Roosevelt (whom they label "Frankly Destructive)): and Idealists bring up the rear with a little song about what we COULD have if only we didn't have what we have now.

Some day it may be necessary, in order to get some rest, to go to the Sudan and listen to only ONE brain-fever bird.

—O—

Capitalist Reasoning

Opera receipts have fallen off in recent years while movie-houses report a sky-rocketing business. From this, an idealist concludes that the American people are pigs and do not appreciate good music. Maybe the fact that the opera costs dollars where the movies cost cents has something to do with it.

Here's another one for my friend to figure out: last year, in the United States, only one pair of trousers for every three men and one overcoat for every eleven men were manufactured. Perhaps men are not sitting down as much as formerly—but this does not seem to jibe with unemployment figures; or maybe the weather is warmer—

There can be no other conclusions, for are we not the richest country in the world?

—G—

Towards Socialism?

A Pennsylvania editor make a crack about Norman Thomas not having to worry about losing out in the presidential election, for his principles were carried out anyway—meaning the New Deal, of course.

—G—

A prominent "viewer-with-alarm"—A Republican, of course—remarks tha approximately 45 million people are being subsidized by the federal government. That is approximately one-third of our population.

In the early months of the New Deal you remember that "red" charges were being hurled continually at F. D. and his confreres. During these late months these charges have lost considerable of their punch. But the charges of waste and graft continue.

Costs are bound to mount. It is said that the New Deal will have spent, at the end of the period in June of this year, more than it cost to run the federal government from 1789 to 1913. That looks big; but it must be remembered that American business has improved in about the same proportion.

I see progress in the admission that unemployment and distress cannot be dealt with adequately by private means; that is facing part of the problem squarely. To retreat to Hoover ideas would be begging the question.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelson

Governor Landon's Debut

While Governor Landon carefully refrained from direct mention of it in his speech at Topeka on the evening of January 29th, everybody understood perfectly well that the occasion marked his entry into the race as an avowed contender for the 1936 Republican presidential nomination.

And as such a speech, it met universal Republican acclaim. He had obviously studied his lesson diligently, using every care to say precisely those things which anti-administration forces might like to hear, while studiously avoiding mention of certain other things which were best left unsaid.

The Constitution

Taking his cue from Al Smith and others, he began with a eulogy of the 'constitooshun'. Landon, it appears, is strong for that sacred document. As he sees it, it has saved us from all manner of ills, running the whole gamut of human afflictions from political oppression to housemaid's knee. In particular, he pointed out, it has had the virtue of preventing majorities from having their way as against minorities. . .

"For a century and a half, the Constitution has protected American citizens against such an oppression!" he said.

At this thunderous applause broke loose among his well-fed audience. They seemed quite to agree with him. . . The minority had, indeed, managed to do right well during the past. And they would do fully as well in the future if only that happy state of non-interference could be relied upon to continue.

"It has been the guarantee of the right to conduct lawful personal affairs without interference by meddling bureaucracy," he continued.

Again, long and loud applause. One might have guessed where Landon's audience stood on the present Administration's effort to control public utilities, for example. And one might have made a guess, too, on where Landon himself stood on that same question.

The National Debt

He viewed with extreme alarm state of the nation's finances. One might have drawn the inference that had he had control of Uncle Sam's purse strings, matters would have been handled differently.

He pointed with pride, however, to Kansas' record of economical government. It was thus, in fact, he earned the apellation, "The Topeka Coolidge", and not, as some have intimated, by reason of the New Year card incident . . . when he sent cards back to the printer to be trimmed off a little so they could be mailed for half a cent less each.

Not long since, Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins claimed that the State of Kansas hadn't contributed a thin dime for relief. The Governor got back at him. According to Landon, federal relief had been shamefully wasteful and inefficient. "We need a cheaper, simpler and more responsible relief administration!" quoth Landon. (There, Hopkins! Take that!).

Recovery

But, after all, said the Governor, it wasn't relief that was the big problem, but employment. He stated that restored confidence in the nation's finances was the tobasco sauce which would turn the trick.

He didn't explain it came about that the worst unemployment was during the Republican Hoover administration. But, then, why bring that up!

Agriculture

That, he admitted, was something of a knotty problem. He didn't, except by indirection, attack the late lamented AAA . . . mindful, perhaps, of the many Kansas farmers who had received federal checks. In fact, he approached the subject as cautiously as one would sneak upon a fractious call that had broken out of the pen.

The Republicans would do something, of course. That could be depended on. But he wasn't sure just what. We'll all have to get together on the business, he thought. And he felt confident the result would be something far better than anything the Democrats could possibly think of.

He was, however, too cautious to repeat cherubic Herbert's promise of a chicken in every pot and two cars in every garage. But one may not doubt that these blessings and many others will come to us if we turn the Government over to the Republicans once more.

Mother Always Remembers—

by O. Lawrence Hawthorne

I don't see how my Mother knows
When everybuddy's birthday is.
She does, though! But I'll bet my Dad
Would never think of even his,
Unless my Mother made a cake
For him, jus' like she does for me.
A mother never could forget
A date, as far as I can see.

We know that every holiday
There'll be a party for us boys,
With decorations everywhere
An' special kinds o' games an' toys.
We know we'll have a Christmas tree;
We know we'll always get a lot
Of Easter eggs an' Valentines—
'Cause Mother never has forgot!

Sometimes, I guess, my Dad would like
It better if she did forget
A anniversary or two—
'Cause he feels kinda cheap, I'll bet,
When Mother gives him somethin' swell,
An' he looks at the calendar
An' finds out it's their weddin' day—
An' he ain't got a thing for her!

THE PRINCIPAL USES OF MONEY

The principal uses of money are its use for a medium of exchange and its use for storing capital. It is the latter that makes most of the trouble so far as concerns the money question.

If one could find a workable way to eliminate the use of money for storing capital, it would be a very simple matter to get a scientific money system that could not be used to defraud the different classes of citizens.

The worst way of using money for storing capital is hoarding, but loaning it out on interest is not much better. The first reduces the amount of money in circulation 100 percent of the amount hoarded, while the latter form reduces it only slightly on the average, but then the interest charge makes another trouble by making artificial wealth capable of earning, so that it vastly increases the practice of using money for the purpose of storing capital.

One splendid way to reduce greatly this use of money, would be to provide, by law, a set of adequate pensions for old age, and all other disabilities, so that people would not be tempted to get such protection by storing capital.

It is the tremendous amount of stored capital (bonds, stocks, mortgages, and other debts) that is ruining prosperity in this country, with the single exception of stocks whose earnings are based on production of real wealth.

Just think, 230 billion dollars of stored capital of artificial wealth, as against 175 billion dollars worth of real wealth! Is it any wonder that the "depression" is still here?

Now, being that the government has the taxing power, pensions (which would take the place of private insurance) would not need to pile up billions of reserves as do private insurance companies, and thus would greatly prevent the deflationary effects of storing capital. However both these hoarding and usury systems are wrong and condemned in the word of God, and will therefore wreck our whole civilization in length of time if no remedy is found.

It is the creditor class that is now stopping all kinds of badly needed inflationary measures from passing Congress, because they do not want a rise in prices and wages, because if these go up, they will get less for their stored capital and its earnings. Better would be to pension every "widow and orphan" than to ruin all producers just to save their savings.

We have 31 wonderful values in used automobiles. All popular standard makes. Many late models. In perfect condition. Some are all serviced for winter driving including heaters and frost shields. Our prices are very low now because the space is valuable for winter storage. Prices will be advanced in the next 30 days, because they are now far below actual value.

Used Truck Values

We have many very outstanding values in used trucks. Many late models. Dual and single tire equipment. Plain trucks, or with stake bodies, platforms or enclosed vans. Among our used truck stock—some 1929-30 and 31 models in fine condition at very low prices that would make wonderful investments for low farm truck investment as well as other light hauling.

Used Tractor Values

At this time only two used tractors on hand, both 10-20 McCormick-Deering. The one has been thoroughly reconditioned and the other checked and necessary replacements made. Both at better prices now than later.

From tillage tools to tractors. For over a century the McCormick-Deering equipment has and is marching on in the lead, with quality, performance, endurance and very important is that of service, replacement parts whenever needed. McCormick-Deering is second to none in service and we are playing our part in that service. We are here to serve you on the new machine you want and the service you need ever after.

Time Marches On

In another month a quarter of a century is history of our business. Many of our first customers back in 1911 are still living. Many old friends and still they are. Many that were not here in 1911 are customers of ours today. The young and the old, the old and the new. We are going to be so happy to have you with us for our anniversary celebration, March 19th, 20th, and 21st. A detailed program will be published later. Each forenoon will be devoted to special demonstrations and discussions on new developments in machines, tractors and automobiles. In the afternoons there will be many interesting and instructive talks and lots of interesting movie pictures. Lunch will be served each afternoon. As we plan a three day program this year, there will be no noon luncheon, but coffee, doughnuts, and rolls each afternoon. Details later. It's a 25th anniversary and we are going to try to make it worth while.

Finalists are Chosen In Declam. Contest

At the final elimination contest held in the Lincoln High School Assembly Monday evening, February 10, Oscar Bickley, Evelyn Furuseth, and Marjorie Matheson were selected to represent Lincoln high school in the sub-district declamatory contest to be held here Friday, February 21.

Those competing in the final elimination were Charles Asp, Wendell Olson, Robert Smith, Oscar Bickley and Clifford Oleson in the oratorical division; Evelyn Furuseth, Violet Anderson, and Edna Swanson in the dramatic division; and Mary Chommie, Fae Belcher, and Marjorie Matheson in the humorous division. The judges for the contest were Mrs. P. A. Lundgren, Mrs. C. W. Vorachek, and Lincoln Arnold. The girls glee club of the Lincoln high school, under the direction of Miss Erma Springen, sang a selection.

Sportsmen Urged To File Reports

Sportsmen are asked to cooperate with the division of game and fish by sending in their 1935 small game license reports. According to A. C. Hanson, director of the division, only about 25 per cent of the licensees have sent in their reports.

The reports are necessary for the game tabulations now being carried on, Mr. Hanson pointed out. The law provides that licensees shall send the reports to the division of game and fish by January 30 of the year following the expiration of the license. Persons failing to make their reports may be refused licenses for the following year.

The license reports are printed on postcards addressed to the division of game and fish. All that is necessary is to indicate game taken in 1935 and stamp and mail the card.

Seed Grain Meetings To Be Held in County

Seed problems, with special reference to the use of low quality seed grain and seed treatment, will be discussed by W. W. Brookins, Extension Agronomist, at meetings to be held next week says Mr. R. M. Douglass, Pennington County Agent.

Meetings will be held at Goodridge on Thursday, February 20, at 2 P. M. and at the Bilden & Olson Hall in St. Hilaire on Friday, February 21 at 2 P. M.

The seed grain problem is of particular importance this year as most of the grain is of low qualit, Mr. Douglass says and farmers should make a special effort to attend one of these meetings.

WPA Will Pay the Prevailing Wages

Prevailing wage jobs on Public Works Administration and other federal agency projects will be available this month for approximately 9,000 Works Progress administration workers. Victor Christgau, state WPA administrator, announced today.

Mr Christgau said the 9,000 prevailing wage jobs include some available at once while others have been definitely scheduled for February. The schedule, he added, will be changed only if inclement weather makes it impossible to start work on some of the projects as planned.

Before May 1, more than 30,000 prevailing wage jobs will be available to WPA workers through other federal agencies launching projects in the state, the administrator said.

"Preference will be given to those WPA workers who specifically request the prevailing wage." Mr. Christgau explained. "A number of organizations have approached us on this subject recently. We have more requisitions for other federal agency projects than we have been able to fill and we therefore, are planning to issue transefrs immediately upon receipt of requests from any WPA workers."

Questioned in regard to the state-wide WPA workers' conference, Mr. Christgau pointed out that "requisitions of other federal agencies for men to be employed at the prevailing wage rate considerably outnumber the current requests for these jobs. We shall be glad to take care of all petitioners who desire transfers."

Itaska Park Deer Removal Plan Dropped

Local opposition to plans of the department of conservation to remove deer from Itasca State Park has resulted in abandonment of the project, according to E. V. Willard, commissioner of conservation.

The department had contended that there were too many deer in the park to be supported by natural browse and that artificial feeding of the deer in winter would merely encourage a still greater concentration.

Plans to remove the deer were dropped when local residents objected to the removal of more than fifty animals. In explaining this action Mr. Willard said that the removal of only fifty deer in winter would not "measurably improve" conditions for the remaining animals.

"The department still recognizes the over-population of deer in Itasca Park", Mr. Willard said. "Artificial feeding is not the answer as long as other areas are available which will support greater number of deer on natural browse.

"In addition to the problem of conserving deer life, means must be found to encourage reproduction of forest growth within the park. All forestry experts with whom I have conferred on this subject are agreed that the time has come when the department will have to choose between deer and young trees.

"I feel that when the local people fully understand the problem within the park and the aims of the department to solve it, we will have their hearty cooperation. We would like to feel that we have the support of all the conservation groups and sportsmen in the vicinity."

DEVIL APPEARS IN 4-HORNED RABBIT

Elk River—Horned rabbits are not at all common, and when Fred Pieri, who lives on a farm about three miles east of Elk River, shot a rabbit recently and found it had four distinct horns growing on top of its head, he thought it was quite a curiosity. The rabbit had been hanging around the buildings on the Pieri farm for some time, and he finally got a shot at it. The rabbit appeared to be normal otherwise, but the horns were about an inch long and were of a hard bony substance.

State Ranks High in Road Improvements

Figures compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads show Minnesota ranking third among all the states in mileage of highway improvements completed up to the beginning of the present year with emergency federal funds provided by the National Industrial Recovery act and the act of June 18, 1934. This announcement was made by a highway department bulletin.

In mileage of improvements completed with federal Works Program highway funds Minnesota ranks first. It stands in third position in mileage approved for construction by federal engineers, and in tenth place in mileage under construction.

Hitler Worried by Shop Council Election

Leipzig (CS)—The all powerful German Labor Front has just held its annual congress in this city. Attended by more than 4,000 labor officials from all over Germany and surrounded by the usual Nazi pomp, the congress was a brilliant show, but nothing else. Lengthy speeches by Dr. Ley and other labor and economic leaders were delivered but none was permitted to touch upon the vital problems facing the laboring masses, as wages working conditions, employment, and so on.

With the German people under the thumb of Dr. Schacht and a handful of German capitalists, the leaders of the Nazi Labor Front were compelled to admit that the "hard facts around them" collided with their best wishes and desires. The speeches were deliberately vague and non-committal. The situation was summed up in the apt remarks of an old observer: "the speakers do not know what they want, but they want it very badly."

First Public Test

There are, however, a great many questions that are causing considerable unrest in the ranks of the labor hierarchy of Germany. Nation-wide shop council elections are scheduled for April 3rd and 4th, and as the experience of the last two years has proven, an ever-increasing vote of considerable proportions will be cast against the Nazis. The workers are restless as never before and since no test of public opinion in Naziland was made since August 1934, these coming workers' elections take on an added significance. It is precisely for these reasons that the Nazis are unwilling to face a smashing defeat. According to semi-official announcements the elections will take place, but "its results will be made known publicly only, when and if circumstances permit it," and will mainly serve as a "guidance for the Nazi regime in its future labor policy."

New Taxes

Another problem facing the working masses of Germany is the tax increase of 1,300,000,000 marks ($520,000,000) in the next fiscal year, which will have to be borne mainly by the workers. The expected new taxes are the result of the hectic Nazi expenditures for rearmament and are in direct contrast to the Nazis promises before their advent to power in 1933.

A Mighty Power

The regimentation of the German people under the Nazi iron first has resulted in an imposing Labor Front organization. The Labor Front, according to the report rendered before the congress has 23,000,000 members; it is divided into 13 territorial federations, 32 divisions, 852 sections and 14,271 local branches. According to the same report, a total of 75,000,000 marks was paid during the last year for membership benefits, while 125,000,000 marks were expended for other activities among them political (Nazi) training, "Strength Through Joy", vocational training, and so on. But while the sum of 75,000,000 marks may look very imposing, it should be noted that the free trade unions of Germany, whose membership was only one fourth of the alleged membership of the Labor Front, spent more than 100,000,000 marks for benefits alone in 1931.

Assuming that the membership total of 23,000,000 is correct, and that each member pays average dues of 2 marks ($.70) per month, the total annual income of the Labor Front would amount to 552,000,000 marks. It is pertinent to ask: What becomes of the remaining 352,000,000 marks? No report concerning the use of these huge sums has been given and none is expected although a great many workers throughout Germany have repeatedly insisted on an unequivocal answer.

INTRODUCE YOUTH ACT TO SUPPLANT NYA FARCE

Washington— Jobless young people and needy students are guaranteed a minimum living standard in a new bill introduced to supplant the Roosevelt National Youth Act. The bill, known as the American Youth Act, was drawn up by the American Youth Congress and introduced in both houses of Congress by Rep. Thomas Amlie (Prog., Wis.), and Senator Elmer Benson (F-L, Minn.).

The new act provides for the employment of young people and the payment of tuition fees and living expenses for students. In contrast to the NYA it provides for prevailing wage rates so as to protect the adult workers' standard; for work projects only so as to avoid crowding the labor market; for control by local representative youth commissions rather than a Washington-appointed bureaucracy; and for the protection of young people who refuse to work while a strike is in progress.

Wet Proof That Repeal has Failed

By W. G. Calderwood

Like many other publications the NEW YORK TIMES in its magazine section recently reviewed the results of the first two years under repeal. The TIMES was among the very wet papers during prohibition, and was a bold and belligerent champion of repeal. As an obvious necessity to 'save its face' the TIMES article states that "Conditions are far better than when Prohibition was with us." But having made that assertion, the article almost immediately assumes an apologetic tone, admitting that the "improvement has been more apparent than real . . . The most conspicuous results of repeal may be termed negative."

It is true, however, that some positive benefits are claimed. But they are based on lop-sided bookkeeping which shows but one side of the ledger. The article boasts of the revenue received, but forgets to say drinkers wasted $11 for every dollar of liquor revenue. It stresses the benefits to the farmer, but omits the fact, certified by the National Dairy Council, that the consumption of milk has suffered a decline of over four billion pounds since dry 1933, as against a gain of approximately 18 billion pounds during Prohibition. The statement is made that "one expert believes that 1,000,000 men are employed directly or indirectly" in the liquor business, tho the total number of unemployed is still from 10 to 12 millions showing no decrease during the two years. The one million liquor workers evidently put one million milk, grocery, clothing, and other workers out of work.

There follow some of the evil results of repeal quoted from the article:

"Repeal has not proved an economic panacea." The nation's deficits have greatly increased.

" . . . authorities think that at least one glass of illicit liquor is consumed for every legal drink." Repeal did not eliminate the bootlegger.

"Glasses are (now) lifted not 'to' but 'with' the ladies." Mothers are being besotted.

"Recent scandals in the (state sale) monopoly in 16 states . . ." Repeal put liquor back into politics.

"Drinking has seeped more widely through the population than before."

Taken as a whole the article gives substantial support to the contention of the drys that "Repeal has failed."

3,000 GALLON OIL 'GUSHER' BROT IN

Wells—Residents of Easton, in Faribault county, put on an oil rush last week. It was one of those wild scrambles compared to the hectic scenes during the gusher days in the Texas and Oklahoma oil fields. There was oil all over the place, hundreds of gallons of it, pouring out on the ground and plenty for everyone. So Easton residents scampered off to get their utensils and gathered it up in pans, tubs, and cans. But there is a catch to the story. The 'oil' and kerosene, freed from bulk storage tanks of the Pure Oil Co. when a truck backed into a pipe leading to the tank. The pipe broke off and allowed the kerosene to pour out on the ground. Ted Weiman, Pure Oil manager, estimated that a total of 3,000 gallons of kerosene was saved with the assistance of persons who hurried from all directions to gather the oil from the ground into whatever they had handy. It was estimated that about an equal amount was lost.

A GOOD RETRIEVER

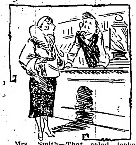
A short-sighted man lost his hat in a strong wind. He gave chase, but every time he thought he was catching up with it, it was whisked away from under his hand.

A farmer's wife, who had been watching him for some time rushed down to the yard gate. "What are you doing there?" she screamed.

"I'm trying to retrieve my hat, madam," he answered politely.

"Your hat!" she exclaimed. "Why, there it is over by that wall. That's one of my black hens you've been chasing."—Montreal Star.

OH, MY GOODNESS!



Mrs. Smith—That salad looks tempting, but it doesn't contain many calories.

Delicatessen Man — Madam, I fixed that salad myself and I put an extra quart of genuine imported calories in it.

Too Great a Drop

A man from an adjoining state applied at a canning plant for employment. He was accepted and later asked:

"How much do you pay?"

"Thirty-two and a half cents," the foreman replied, meaning of course, an hour.

The newly hired laborer looked crestfallen, and remarked.

"Why, I gave up a job that was paying me 40 cents a day and board."—Indianapolis News.

Great Occasion

"I saw them taking Jimpson and his wife to the hospital in an ambulance, as I passed there this morning. What happened to them?" Jackson asked his wife.

"They were overcome by gas from a leaking pipe," said his wife, and she sarcastically added, "That's the first time in years they have gone out together."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Rugged Simplicity

"How are the roads around Crimson Gulch?"

"Bad," answered Mesa Bill.

"Why don't you apply for government funds to fix 'em?"

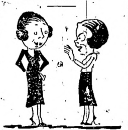
"We can settle our own local arguments better if we don't create facilities for racketeers to come along with high-powered machines and mix in."

Maybe?

A Sunday school teacher in a down-state church was giving his class a moral lesson. "What qualities would you ask God to give you when you grow up? Truth, honesty, and what else?"

"Sales resistance," shouted a bright boy in the front row.—Prairie Farmer.

ON THE SKY-LINE



"What does your husband say when he loses his collar button?"

"We live in such a cute little apartment that he doesn't have room to lose one."

Memory's Chords

Young Scraper—Did you notice that old man crying while I was playing my sonata?

Friend—Yes, and I spoke to him. He said your playing reminded him of the old days when he was happy.

"Was he a violinist?"

"No; he used to ring pigs."

Hard Work

Mrs. Smith—Why are you so late with the milk?

Milkman—Well, you see, the law only allows us so many bacteria to the gallon and you'd be surprised how long it takes to count the little critters!

Quite Warm Anyway

Joe—Did your wife have you on the carpet for getting home so late last night?

Jim—Well, it may have been the carpet she had me on, but it seemed to me more like a red hot stove.—Cincinnati Inquirer.

Stuck to Him

Howell—Much depends on the formation of early habits.

Powell—I know it. When I was a baby my mother hired a woman to wheel me about, and I have been pushed for money ever since.

WHAT IS MONEY

The economist gives us one answer. . . .the philosopher another. It means one thing to the business man, something else to the soap-box orator. Yet to every individual, money is an acknowledged necessity in our present civilization.

It may take many forms. Currency or gold or copper or paper. Personal checks. Drafts. All are money, and all are instruments for the continuation of the necessarily complex system in which we live. Closely affiliated with this present day economic necessity, your bank is your representative in this phase of commerce and industry. Use its facilities freely!

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the airways emergency station. In it are Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to the platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows her contempt for Garth.

CHAPTER II.—Through Garth's guidance the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to take a chance in investing a small amount. Sensing the treachery that lies ahead, Garth secretly removes a small part from the motor of the plane.

CHAPTER III.—Huxby and Lilith taunt Garth with his "gullibility," but their tone soon changes when they try to start the crippled plane. Returning to shore they try to force Garth to give up the missing part. Garth manages to set the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls, where it is wrecked. He points out to the enraged trio that he is their only hope in guiding them out of the wilderness, and to kill him would be fatal to all.

"Go try it yourself," Garth replied, and when Huxby drew away from the offered rifle, he nodded approval. "You are wise not to attack a she-grizzly with cubs."

Spurred on no doubt by the knowledge of that gray monster behind him, Mr. Ramill managed to hold up his end of the tote-pole all the way to camp. Then he sank down purple-faced, wheezing that the exertion had killed him.

His daughter sat by the fire brooding. Though refreshed by her bath in the warm pool, she had begun to feel the craving for drink and tobacco. She had done little stitching on the moccasins. But she livened to horrified alertness when Huxby told about the grizzly.

Garth forestalled an outburst of hysterics. "Keep cool. The old lady will let us alone if we keep clear of her cubs. Keep up the fire, and she will shy clear of you. She doesn't fancy fire. Burnt her paws trying to rob me of a roasting porcupine."

A look at the gold pan showed Garth that the moose muffle had begun to dissolve. He cooled some of the gelatinous broth in the small pot. Mr. Ramill not only gulped down the drink. He smacked his lips and asked for more. At that, both Huxby and the girl were stirred to try the rich drink.

Garth was glad to have all three take their fill of the savory, highly nourishing dish. He knew what was coming. He asked only that the pan be refilled to dissolve more of the muffle.

The three were accustomed to the free drinking of their kind. They had already begun to feel the lack of the usual cocktails, mealtime wines and between-meals whisky. This was aggravated by the lack of tobacco. To ease them as much as possible, he broiled lynx meat on a grating of willow stems, basting it with moose fat. The tender meat kept them occupied until the muffle broth soothed their jangled nerves.

There was a limit, however, to eating, and once its effect began to pass, their craving returned more intense than before. First Miss Ramill, then Huxley, and last of all Mr. Ramill began to make ironical remarks aimed at Garth. He ignored them for some time. The remarks became more offensively witty and sarcastic. He dropped the moccasin upon which he had been sewing, and picked up his rifle.

"I've had enough bitters and sour berries, thank you all. Feed them to yourselves for a while. I'll go get the sleep I missed last night while acting as guardian angel of your sweet slumbers."

CHAPTER V

Mate Woman.

FAR up the tundra slope, above the trough of his platinum placer, Garth found a dry moss-bedded nook on the sunny side of a boulder. He lay down, pulled his hatbrim over his eyes, and let himself fall asleep.

A full eight hours later the sun swung around its wide circle until the shadow of the rock fell upon Garth. Roused by the passing of the warm rays, he pushed back his hat and sat up. He came down to the camp. Mr. Ramill sat beside the fire between his daughter and Huxby. Two or three pouches that Garth had hidden under the moss in the leanto lay open before the men.

Miss Ramill was emptying the last contents of the sugar pouch into a pot of thick tea. She was first to see Garth's noiseless approach.

"Hail to the chief," she mocked. "My dear Mr. Garth, you are most fashionably late to dinner. Will you not join us in a cup of tea?"

Her father turned to eye the uninvited guest with a shade of uneasiness. "You see we found what you were holding out on us, Garth. It's the only trick you failed to put over."

Garth laid down his rifle and came forward. He ignored the wary hostile look of the mining engineer, nodded to Mr. Ramill, and took off his battered hat to bend low before Miss Ramill in a polite bow.

"You are very kind, my dear lady. I could not deprive any of you of your sweets. 'Eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow—' You may recall the rest of the quotation."

Mr. Ramill went red. "What if Lilith did happen to find these things you were hogging for private use? We need them as much as you."

"Quite so. While you're about it, you may as well make a clean sweep. Here." Garth tossed the gold-mounted cigar case to Ramill.

"Oh, so that's how Dad lost his smokes," exclaimed Miss Ramill. "Who's the real sneak around here? Steal all these cigars, and the gold case, too. Then come whining because we've kept you from cheating us out of our share of these things you hid."

Ramill handed the case back to Garth.

"Wa-wait!" cried his daughter.

He waved her away. "No. The joke is on us. He knows what is ahead. We do not. We've emptied the sugarbowl and half the teabag. Tie up that bag and the salt, Vivian, and hand them to him."

"You Are Very Kind, My Dear Lady. I Could Not Deprive Any of You of Your Sweets."

Garth shook his head, and bowed to the angry-eyed girl.

"Thank you, no. Miss Ramill has taken charge. As I recall my Anglo-Saxon, 'lady' originally meant bread-cutter. She was the one who rationed out the food. I figure upon at least five weeks before we reach the Mackenzie. Miss Ramill will keep charge of the salt and tea—do with them whatever she thinks best."

She flared. "I will not! I'll do no such thing."

He glanced around, taking stock of the camp.

"Everything in keeping, I see. No sewing done on the moccasins, muffle all eaten, woodpile nearly used up. You'd better cook and eat all the meat you can before the rest of the wood is burnt. When the fire goes out, we'll have plenty of four-footed visitors to relieve us of those moose legs—wolves, foxes, wolverines."

There followed a silence, broken at last by Miss Ramill. She repeated her first question, but in a very different tone: "Mr. Garth, may I pour you a cup of the tea?"

"Thank you, I do not need it. The rest of you will. I suggest keeping it for breakfast. You'll have no other taste of sweets for over a month, unless we find a bumblebee nest."

The girl silently covered the top of the pot with the inverted tin cup. Her father heaved up his soft bulk. He beckoned to Huxby.

"Come, Vivian. The agreement was that Garth should be skipper. That wood pile will not last another hour. We can't permit any bear raids on our bull-market."

Garth lifted one of the moose quarters from the smoke rack and began to cut off large thin slices. These he laid on the poles for quicker smoke curing and drying. He paid no attention to Miss Ramill.

When the girl saw he did not intend to speak to her, she picked up the salt and tea pouches and went into the leanto. Garth thought she meant to go to bed. Instead, she crawled out again, put one of the freshly cut slices of meat on a willow spit, and held it over the end of the fire where the muffle had simmered.

As soon as the steak was broiled, the cook sullenly offered it to Garth. He took it with no betrayal of his surprise and sat down to eat. "Thank you, sister."

She frowned. "I never hated anyone so much in all my life as I hate you. But that was a mean trick, stealing your sugar."

"All the more reason for you to hate me. Not that it matters a penny—the sugar or your hate. I'll admit, though, it's very interesting to watch the reactions of yourself and your father. Huxby is just a commonplace wolf. But your father and you—the lady of leisure and the millionaire acquirer—tossed from the lap of luxury into the raw wild. You'll have to acknowledge it's high comedy."

Miss Ramill turned her back on him and went to crawl into the leanto. Her father and Huxby came with still more wood to pile on the already high heap of fuel. The engineer went to lie down at his sleeping place on the lee of the fire. During the day he had gathered a much thicker bed of spruce tips and dry moss.

The long hours of twilight slowly faded to the semi-dusk of midnight and as slowly brightened towards full day. Sunrise found the three visitors from the cities still asleep.

Two hours or so later the crack of moose bones under the blows of the belt-ax wakened Huxby. He sat up to turn hungrily in the direction from which came a savory odor. Garth had drawn a thigh bone from the fire and was buttering a piece of broiled meat with hot marrow.

The engineer came around and laid one of the thigh bones on the fire. Above it he slanted a steak on a spit. Neither he nor Garth spoke. He started to eat his steak and marrow before either was more than half cooked.

Garth finished his own breakfast and began to sew a moccasin. As soon as Huxby had bolted down his food, he picked up the emptied gold pan. Miss Ramill had sat up in the front of the leanto to lace her boots. Her father crept out past her.

"Morning, Vivian," he greeted. "I see you're going to set the pan on the fire again. Good idea. That muffle aspic is all Garth told us it would be."

"No." Huxby's tone was almost curt. "We've lost too much time already. I am going to make a complete test of that placer deposit."

He looked with cold wariness at the rightful claimant of the placer. Garth smiled. "Go to it. The more you pan out, the more of my 60 per cent I'll be able to jingle in my pocket."

That sent the engineer off with a crease between his hard eyes. Mr. Ramill studied Garth's amused face.

"What is the idea?" he inquired. "Do you infer you still stand by the terms you offered?"

"Well, I may at least allow you four-tenths of what your Man Friday sweats out of my placer. The laborer is worthy of his hire—I'm going for a dip. You and Miss Ramill might get your moose bones to roasting. The marrow goes well with the steaks. Let me suggest that you build a large fire in the regular cook hole. When it burns low, rake out the coals and lay in one of the forelegs, thickly smeared with mud. Then rake on dirt, embers and ashes, built a small fire on top, and keep it going four or five hours."

Miss Ramill looked down at her slender hands. They were already roughened and grimed, and two of the highly manicured nails had been broken. The large diamond of her engagement ring flashed blue-white fire up into her angrily flashing blue eyes. She jerked her head up to flare out at Garth. He was already disappearing in the brush on his way to the rock pool.

When he returned from his plunge, a fire was flaming high in the cook hole. Well away from it, the heiress to millions was smearing one of the moose legs with mud brought up from the lake shore by her father in his expensive soft hat.

Garth raked the thigh bones from the smudge-fire and set back the spits of the partly burnt steaks. He then dripped melting moose fat into a small twist-cup of birchbark that he had brought back with him. The cup already held two or three gills of spruce pitch.

Garth offered his dope. "Best cosmetic in the North. You may as well go the limit."

"I'll die first!"

Her father dipped his fingers in the dope and smeared the stuff on his face and neck as Garth had done.

Garth said: "Eat your fill. Miss Ramill will stay to tend the fires. You and I are to climb. You'll wear Huxby's leather trousers outside your own."

"They'll not be after a few days. You'll wear the jacket also."

A taste of hot marrow roused the girl's appetite. Hunger overcame her other cravings. She said nothing even when, at the end of the meal, her father drew on Huxby's flying suit over his clothes and started off with Garth.

Though Garth had spoken of a climb, he first led along the lake shore to the beginning of the muskeg swamp. Then turned and slanted gradually up through the belt of spruce trees until the west side of the trough was reached at timberline. He stopped to look at Huxby while Mr. Ramill caught his second wind. The mining engineer gave no heed to them. He was hard at work panning out gravel, midway up to the discovery stake.

TRAIN KILLS HORSE IN FREAK ACCIDENT

Benson—Death swooped down on two Benson farmers at the rate of 70 miles an hour recently, only to be cheated when a horse was stripped of its harness and carried 100 feet up the railroad track, leaving the other horse, the sleigh, and two men unharmed. L. Reishen and Otto Puchulske were driving their sleigh into town and did not see the fast mail train, three hours behind schedule and trying to make up time. With the train almost on top of them, Puchulske swerved the team to the right and away from the train. This move brought the sleigh and its occupants out of danger, but the engine struck the horse on the left side. The animal, instantly killed, was hurled completely out of its harness 100 feet down the track. The remaining horse escaped injury, and no appreciable damage was done to the sleigh or the two men, who leaped to safety.

PLAN TO BUILD CO-OP CREAMERY

Watford City, N. D.—Plans for the building of a co-operative creamery here will be considered at a mass meeting in the near future, interested farmers and Union members reported. The proposal, first discussed at the Farmers Union regular meeting here January 4, found much favor and the motion to call a mass meeting was carried.

Under present plans the creamery would be constructed through the rehabilitation program sponsored by the administration.

WISCONSIN MAKES PLANS FOR CO-OP. SCHOOL

A six-day "school in the Management of Co-operatives" will be held by the Wisconsin College of Agriculture in March. In announcing the new course, Dean Christensen pointed out:

"The ever-increasing complexity of modern distribution demands more consideration to management problems. The educational need of management in distribution prompts us to take a new step in providing special training for those who must assume direct responsibility as managers, directors, and other employees, such as young men."—Equity Union Exchange.

CO-OPERATIVE EGG AUCTIONS SUCCEED IN QUAKER STATE

Slightly more than 4,038,550 dozen eggs were sold for an average of over 30 1-2 cents a dozen. This average price is for all sizes and grades.

Members of the co-operatives receive the high average because 88½ per cent of their large and medium sized eggs are sold in the two top grades.

Co-operative egg auctions in Pennsylvania have enjoyed a steady and consistent growth since the first one was started in July, 1930.

BIWABIK STORE GETS OWN HOME; AUGMENTS TRADE

Biwabik, Minn.—The organized consumers of this Mesabe Range city are getting ready to move their growing store society to new headquarters. It is a modern one-story building, constructed of brick and located on the town's main street. Recently purchased by the association, the premises are now being remodeled to include a meat market. The association's annual membership meeting, held on Jan. 26 instructed the board to buy the necessary equipment to operate a modern meat department.

Felix Jarvela, manager of the society, reported that the 1935 volume amounted to $51,835.45, or 36.48 percent more than in 1934. The operating expenses had been reduced by .93 percent in comparison with the previous year, the 1935 ratio being 9.99 percent of the sales.

The meeting voted to pay 6 percent interest on shares, and to return the balance of the net gain of $2,923.14 as a 3½ percent patronage rebate.

BELTRAMI FARM BUREAU FAVORS CO-OPERATIVE

Bemidji, Minn.—The Beltrami county farm bureau has endorsed the federal rural electrification program, as well as the proposed municipal electric plant for Bemidji, which was accepted by the voters in a referendum.

If the city council does not establish a municipal plant, and if the local power company does not provide a reasonable rate, a co-operative generating plant should be established, the farm bureau voted.

BOYS SNOWSHOE TO REACH SCHOOL

Virginia—Old-timers talk about the hardships involved in getting to and from the Old Red Schoolhouse, but they have nothing on four sons of Mr. and Mrs. John Nes of the East Bay fishing camp on Crane Lake, northern boundry water. Chester, 17, Raymon, 15, Charles, 9, and Glen, 8, and snowshoe one mile morning and night over the ice of the wind-blown lake to meet the school bus, and they never miss it, no matter how cold the weather. From the point they meet the bus, they are taken along with other Crane lake children to the school in Buyck, which is 13 miles from Nelson's. In the spring during the thaw, the boys get up at four o'clock in the morning, and with books and lunch pails under their arms, hike down a narrow trail about two and one-half miles around the lake. When the lake is open the boys use a boat and motor to get across.

Coop. Association Takes Over Forum Pub. Co.

namely the advertisers, job department patrons and subscribers.

R. M. Aalbu has been temporarily retained by the board as editor of the publication and F. H. Nickeson, who has been employed by the institution in the past as advertising and circulation manager has been appointed business manager until the next meeting of the board of directors.

It is the intention of the new organization to give the people of the territory the best possible newspaper, and one that will present to them the news of the entire region. Altho the Forum is not the official paper of Pennington county an effort will be made to publish the county proceedings as a service to the readers. It is also planned that the proceedings of the Marshall and Red Lake county boards will be published in this paper. It is particularly desired that correspondents can be contacted in all villages in this region so that a live and up-to-the minute news service of the territory can be maintained.

The economic and political views of the board of directors is well known to the people of this territory, a statement to the public from the board appearing elsewhere in this issue states. The Forum will continue to support progressive principles.

Under the articles of incorporation, the first annual meeting will be held on the second Monday of April, which this year falls on the thirteenth, and at that time the stockholders will have an opportunity of electing a permanent board of directors. The board, which consists of nine members will be elected as follows: three for a term of three years; three for a term of two years and three for a term of one year.

The organization board has put in a great deal of labor in completing the organization of this association and the stockholders are scattered thruout the entire three counties and other parts of the state. Owing to the extreme cold weather and heavy snow, it has been impossible to get out among the people as much as should have been done. The sale of stock is therefore far from completed. However, the 20 percent required by law has been subscribed which has made it possible for the association to commence business. An intensive drive for membership will be conducted between now and the annual meeting in April to boost the membership to at least five hundred members.

Council Gives New Taxi Ordinance 1st Reading

A letter was read from the Workmen's Protective League requesting an explanation of the report that some of the men employed by the city at cording wood were being paid only 25 cents per hour while the scale set by the city council at the last meeting was 35 cents per hour for common labor. Relief administrator Chas. Evenson admitted that he had recorded some of the men at less than 35 cents per hour but stated in explanation that some men are worth 75 cents an hour while others are not worth their salt. Earl Long, business agent for the WPL being present said that if the men are not worthy of their hire they should not be kept on the job. "We're doing the best we can" Mr. Evanson retorted "and we don't propose to take orders from the town of North nor anybody else." The council instructed that the men are to be paid at the rate of 35 cents per hour.

On opening bids for city depository, the Union State Bank was awarded the contract. City printing bids were submitted as follows; Times, official proceedings and official notices, etc., per folio 15 cents; additional for subsequent insertions 10 cents per folio; nothing additional for tabular matter. Forum, 25 cents per folio for straight composition on all proceedings, official notices, etc.; nine cents additional for tabular matter and 10 cents for subsequent insertions.

The taxi drivers ordinance was given its first reading and provides that applications for license must be made to the city clerk in writing. License is fixed at $5 for the first cab and $3 per additional cab. Expirations are set at February 15th of each year. Drivers must carry liability insurance satisfactory to the city council providing single liability of $10,000 and total liability of $20,000. License will be subject to cancellation for failure to pay premiums and the driver's applications must be approved by the mayor. License plates to be attached to the state license plates are to be provided. Penalty for operating a taxi without license is set at 90 days imprisonment or $100 fine.

A resolution was passed approving for payment to Helen McGrath and Sara E. Hunt, the sum of $1600 for the two lots adjoining the auditorium to the south. Taxes are to be deducted.

Another cordwood project was approved. This time the council will purchase the stumpage from McGilvrey at 75 cents per cord and will pay one dollar per cord for hauling.

DEPOSITORS OF CITIZENS BANK TO BID ON BLDG.

Will Submit Bid to Court and Form Corporation to Operate Building

Depositors in the Citizens State Bank in process of liquidation, who have assigned their prospective dividends towards a purchase of the Citizens State Bank building met at the Pennington County Court House on Tuesday evening for the purpose of perfecting an organization.

Rasmus Oen was elected temporary chairman and Gilbert Brattland was elected temporary secretary after which H. O. Chommie, explained the purpose of the meeting and the required formalities which must be gone thru to acquire the building. He explained that it would be necessary to place a bid for the building with the court and that if the bid is accepted that a corporation would have to be formed to take over the building. He moved that the depositors make an offer of $25,000.00 for the building subject to the 1935 taxes, but that the proposed new organization should have retroactive possession of the premises and the income and be responsible for the running expenses as of January first, 1936. This motion was seconded and carried. The chairman was authorized to name a committee of five, including himself to have power to submit the bid to the court and be empowered to incorporate under the laws of the state, issuing stock to all depositors who have assigned their dividends. The committee was also authorized to employ the necessary legal counsel.

Two Alarms Keep Fire Dept. in Fine Fettle

The Thief River fire department was called out twice during the past week, both calls being for minor alarms. A fire in the attic at 507 Kendall south was promptly squelched. A call to north Knight avenue resulted when a gas explosion blew the furnace pipe out of the chimney.

FIRE DESTROYS THREE BUILDINGS AT BADGER WED.

Midnight Blaze Levels Half Block In Northern Village

A devastating fire swept the village of Badger on Tuesday night which in the space of two hours levelled half a block into smouldering ruins. Three buildings, including the Jenson garage, a theater and the Axel Johnson store, were destroyed.

The blaze was believed to have started from defective wiring in the garage. Flames swept that structure and spread to the other two structures. Severe cold and a frozen water supply hampered fire men in their work. The Roseau department was called and aided in preventing the blaze from spreading to the next block.

Nineteen automobiles in the garage were destroyed as were the contents of the unused theater building. The stock of the Johnson store was carried out and saved.

The fire was discovered at about 12:20 midnight and by two o'clock the block had been ruined. The loss is estimated at from $20,000 to $25,000 only partly covered by insurance.

FISH AND GAME COM. NAMES NEW GAME WARDENS

New Men are to Work at Large Over the State on Big Violators

Assignment of three state game wardens to new duties as Wardens-at-large was announced last week by A. C. Hanson, director of the division of game and fish. The men are: Labe Safro, Shakopee, Victor L. Schleppegrell, Little Fork, and John E. Salvatore, St. Paul.

Selected because of loyalty and fearlessness, the men will be called upon to act in law violations of a serious nature where local game wardens are unable to cope with the situation. A fourth game warden will join the group before March 1. If the new departmental plan proves successful, two more wardens may be added as conditions warrant.

Schleppegrell and Salvatore last week began checking fishing violations near the Canadian border. The division of game and fish is cooperating with the state department of agriculture in this work. A considerable number of large-scale violations have been reported from this area.

It is interesting to note that two of the new wardens-at-large, Safro and Salvatore, were formerly well-known boxers. About 20 years ago the two men met in three of the hardest fought encounters in the history of Minnesota boxing. They remained firm friends with the greatest of respect for each other.

TVA IS UPHELD IN HIGH COURT BY 8 TO 1 VOTE

Senator Norris Expresses Satisfaction With the Decision

THREE MORE DAMS ARE BEING BUILT

Second of Nine Supreme Court Trials Won By New Dealers

The Supreme Court upheld the government in the Tennessee Valley Administration suit by an 8 to 1 decision handed down on Monday. Justice McReynolds, alone dissenting. Four justices had favored throwing the case out, holding that the court had no jurisdiction. Chief Justice Hughes read the decision to a packed court chamber containing many notables.

The decision upholds the government's constitutional right to construct dams for national defense and its right to sell surplus power and seek a market therefore. While the court thus set its seal of approval upon the Tennessee Valley authority's acquisition of transmission lines it did not however, pass on the constitutionality of the vast Tennesee Valley project as a whole, or on TVA's announced intention of creating a "yardstick" measuring the proper cost of electrical energy.

The decision was the New Deal's second victory in nine trips to the Supreme Court, the other being the well-known "gold clause" case of a year ago.

Altho concurring in the decision of the majority, justices Brandeis, Stone, Cardozo and Roberts in a separate opinion held the court should have dismissed the action on the ground that it had no jurisdiction.

Hughes limited the courts decision to constitutional questions raised in a $1,150,000 contract for the purchase of transmission lines by the TVA from the Alabama Power company. In so doing the court did not pass on the validity of activities such as land purchases, re-settlement or encouraging the broader use of electrical energy.

Three new dams are now being constructed in the Tennessee valley. They are the Norris, Wheeler and Pickwick Landing dams. Government representatives stated that the decision removed any danger of attack upon other power construction projects engaged in by the government.

Senator Norris, father of the project is quoted as saying when he heard of the decision, "I'm delighted. I'd have been brokenhearted if the decision had gone the other way. It ought to help my rural electrification bill."

Its Cold Because Things Are Not So Hot Up Around the Gulf of Alaska

An explanation of the continued cold wave was given by M. R. Hovde, government meteorologist stationed at Minneapolis and published in Tuesday's Minneapolis Journal. According to Hovde, during normal winters there is a low pressure area in the gulf of Alaska which acts as a buffer turning the cold northeast Siberian air currents back over northern Canada and Labrador. This warm low pressure spot has been abnormally absent this year Professor Hovde states, and therefore the cold Arctic breezes sweep unmolested and unchecked down the Yukon country over the McKenzie basin, down the east side of the Rocky Mountains and right up to our front door.

Whether Professor Hovde's deductions are correct or not he has started a weather map craze that bids fair to outdo the crossword puzzle craze. Government weather maps are being carefully examined and checked for a hot spot up near Bering Strait. When that shows up everyone will undoubtedly heave a sigh of relief and close off the draft on the parlor heater even with the mercury at 45. For that is to herald the long-awaited relief.

Regardless of prospective hot spots in the arctic or the lack of them, however, the mercury ventured up very near the zero mark on Wednesday afternoon. The temperatures as recorded by Fred Protz at the post office thermometer showed the low points for the week to be as follows: Friday, —35; Saturday, —46; Sunday, —43; Monday, —27; Tuesday, —11; Wednesday, —29; Thursday, —26.

Creamery Almost Down 2 Years Ago, Comes Back

The story of a co-operative creamery that was almost wrecked and could work itself back into a solvent and successful business institution was unfolded at the annual meeting of the Strathcona farmers co-operative creamery association held at that village yesterday.

The institution received 253,487 pounds of cream during 1935 and manufactured over 88,000 pounds of butter. An average price of 28 cents per pound was paid on pool and about 25.8 cents for cash purchases. The average price received for butter sold was 24.9 cents per pound.

The financial statement shows an excellent condition and reports a surplus net profit for the year after making all deductions of $69.62. In addition to this an extensive program of remodeling and repairing of the creamery building amounting to around $200 had been engaged in and paid for.

Peoples Coop Store Changes Share Value

The Peoples Co-operative store of this city held a special stockholders meeting at the Odd Fellows hall on Friday afternoon to consider the question of changing the articles of incorporation to provide for shares of ten dollars par value instead of $50 par value as heretofore.

The change was made in order to enlarge the membership of the association, there being many persons who desire to become members, but to whom $50 is too large an investment, it was stated.

Help Asked for Starving Birds

Pheasant and other upland game birds are facing a very serious situation as a result of the protracted severe cold and heavy snow conditions, according to Gustav Swanson, biologist of the division of game and fish.

"There is an immediate need for more funds to feed the starving birds," Mr. Swanson said. "Each day the division of game and fish receives reports from wardens who are finding birds that died of starvation or exposure to the cold.

"In many cases starvation is not the immediate cause, but a well-fed bird can withstand more cold than one that is under-nourished, and it is of utmost importance that food be provided."

HEAVY SCHEDULE FACES PROWLERS IN LATE SEASON

Little Green Wave Leaves Locals in Backwash by Score of 25 to 19

The Lincoln High School Prowlers basketball schedule for the last of the season prior to the district tournament is a heavy one. The team has recently played two home games, one with East Grand Forks last Friday night and another on Tuesday night with Crookston. On Friday and Saturday nights of this week they will go to Bemidji and Cass Lake respectively, and next Wednesday, February 26, they will meet the Grand Forks team on the local auditorium floor. The game next Wednesday will be the last home game of the season.

In the game with East Grand Forks here on February 14, the Prowlers lost to the Little Green Wave by a score of 25 to 19. During the first half of the game the local team made little headway against the strong opposition of the East Grand Forks team, the score at the quarter being 15 to 7 and at the half 21 to 9 in favor of East Grand. However, in the third quarter the Prowlers scored seven points and held their opponents down to a one point gain, making the score at the end of the third quarter considerably less one sided. In the final quarter each team annexed three additional points, making the final score 25 to 19.

The Crookston-Prowlers game, played here Tuesday night, Feb. 18 was strikingly similar to the game with East Grand Forks, but with the Thief River team on the long end of the score and the Crookston team rallying during the last half of the game, the final score being 24 to 23. The Prowlers lead at the end of the first quarter 7 to 2 and at the end of the first half 17 to 8. At the end of the third quarter their lead had dwindled to three points, the score being 19 to 16, and at the close of the game they led by only one point.

Referee Gronnigen of Fertile, who was to have been here for the game was unable to come because of the blocked roads. Donald Chalmers, physical education instructor in the local high school, refereed the game.

The office of the local license registrar did a "landoffice" business last week with a rush that brought in between 400 and 500 applications on Saturday, the final day without penalty.

AGED PENSIONS APPLICATIONS ARE RECEIVED

Present Pensioners Must Make New Applications County Auditor Advises

One hundred old age pension application blanks have been received by county auditor, Arthur Senstad this week and may be secured by applicants by calling at his office, Mr. Senstad stated Wednesday.

Rules received from the state old age pension agency provide that the applications must be made on these blanks and that they must be acknowledged before a notary public. These blanks constitute a complete case record for the applicant, including a record of citizenship or legal residence, financial and marital status.

Persons who are now receiving pension must make a new application and after a hearing by the county board, recipient's certificate will be issued to persons who are eligible for aid. Pensioners must file a report of their condition and circumstances each year within thirty days after the anniversary of the granting of the pension. Present pensioners should file their new applications as soon as possible, the state agency advises.

The county board of commissioners are in meeting today for the purpose of reviewing the directions laid down by the state agency and acquaint themselves with other formalities required.

Three hundred applications are expected in this county, Mr. Senstad stated this week. Additional blanks will be secured as soon as they are available. About fifty application blanks have already been handed out.

Under the law, no pension can be granted to inmates of public institutions, including poor houses, and indications are that many who are now residing at the county poor house will move out and make application for pension.

LIGGETT JURY DECIDES CANN IS NOT GUITY

Search for the Murder to be Carried On Says Gov. Olson

Isadore (Kid Cann) Blumenfield, charged with the murder of Walter W. Liggett, publisher of the Mid-West American, was acquitted Tuesday night by a jury's verdict reached on the first ballot drawn after three and one-half hours of deliberation. The jury's decision exonerates Blumenfield from any blame in the machine-gun slaying of the newspaper publisher in an alley behind his apartment home on December 9.

Blumenfield's alibi that at the time of Liggett's slaying at 5.41 p. m. Blumenfield was in a downtown barber shop was the key-note of his defense. The state in presenting its case, emphasized the fact that two witnesses of the shooting, Mrs. Liggett and Wesley Andersch identified Kid Cann as the slayer.

The state bureau of criminal apprehension and all other available agencies will continue to work on the solution of the Liggett slaying, and every effort will be put forth to apprehend the slayers of the Minneapolis publisher, Governor Floyd B. Olson, announced when he was informed of the acquittal.

Seed Meetings Held This Week

"Test—don't guess", is the warning issued by county agent R. M. Douglass, in discussing seed grain this year. One out of every five samples of 1935 wheat examined at university farm was found to be unfit for seed, because of low germination and low weight per bushel, Mr. Douglass says. Germination shows no relation to weight per bushel, it is stated, since even plump samples have shown low germination tests. Seed treatment has been found to improve germination 10 to 15 percent.

Information on seed treatment and how best to meet this year's seed situation will be available to farmers who attend meetings held this week in this city and at St. Hilaire. A meeting is being held on this subject at the court house in this city this afternoon, which is being addressed by W. W. Brookings, extension agronomist. Mr. Brookings will address a similar meeting at St. Hilaire tomorrow at the Bilden and Olson hall. Both meetings are scheduled to open at 2 P. M.

House Burns on Gust Johnson Farm

The dwelling house on the Gust Johnson farm in Sanders township, 15 miles southwest of Thief River Falls burned to the ground Saturday afternoon when a faulty chimney set fire to the attic over the kitchen. Practically all contents were saved. The loss was covered by insurance.

Mr. Johnson is one of the pioneers of Sanders township and the house which had since been remodeled into a comfortable residence was one of the first built in the township. One of Mr. Johnson's sons was slightly injured when he slipped and fell in trying to avoid being struck by some article being dropped from the upstairs window. He was taken to the home of a neighbor that was reported to be about the next day.

Interesting Letter Received From Kontupohja, Soviet Russia

Sister of Joshua Jokela of Malcolm Writes on Life In the U.S.S.R.

Editor's Note: We take a great deal of pleasure in passing on to our readers a letter to Joshua Jokela of Malcolm from his sister Selma McCone of Kontupohja, Soviet Russia. In sending us the letter for publication, Mr. Jokela states that he will be glad to forward inquiries on conditions in Russia to his sister for reply in future letters. The letter follows:

Kontupohja

Dear brother Joshua:

I am well able to answer your question about the treatment of prisoners, since I have had the opportunity to see it last summer and this winter. There have been and still are a number of groups of prisoners working here in Kontupohja. They work like free men, along with free men, with the exception that they have a warden with them (one of themselves) and that they are not allowed to leave or go any place away from Kontupohja alone. They are grouped together according to their crime, i. e. pickpockets are in one group, murderers in another, etc. There have been prisoners of all kinds here. The wardens of the most dangerous kind are equipped with military clothing and weapons. Some groups have only a foreman of their own in civilian clothes to watch over them.

Usually a criminal (for more serious crimes, such as murder, exploiting labor, forgery, etc) is sent to work far away from home. The prisoners we have here are from southern Russia. There have been groups of prisoners here that have been awarded prizes for good work. And some individual prisoners have been given money prizes and some have been sent to sanitoriums or rest homes for a month or more. And when a person is sent from here to Crimea for instance, to rest for a month in one of the beautiful resorts there, it costs the state no less than one thousand roubles.

For minor crimes a person is allowed to work in his home locality, or in his regular place of work, receiving only a certain percentage of his wages, the rest of the wages going to the state. This happens to people who get drunk and fight among themselves, or resist the militia (police).

In large towns and cities there are street militia to regulate traffic, but in the country it is not yet necessary since there are not enough automobiles. But there is a road construction and repair department in every locality that keeps the roads in condition and builds new roads.

Such criminals that have been found guilty of treason, of plotting to over throw the Soviet government, and who have used their position in trading merchandise to line their own pockets with the proceeds from state goods, by selling elsewhere food and clothing that should have gone to workers for a certain fixed price. Perhaps you heard of the big case some three years ago of a swindle on a large scale, where some foreigners (Englishmen) were involved. A number of Soviet citizens, the ringleaders in the swindle, received the supreme punishment. Their names were published in the papers.

You want to know how much we have progressed in the production and distribution of food. To that I can say, that the plans for last year's production in most lines were exceeded to a large extent. The first of last October all food rationing and special privileges to the foreigners were abolished. All the stores were supplied with all kinds of food materials and the prices cut down. Since that time there has been two more price cuts on food stuff. The price of clothing has also gone down, while more and more goods fill the shelves in the stores.

Of course, the prices are high yet, but as time goes on we can expect price cuts several times in the year. And the same time as price cutting has been going on, the wages have been considerably raised in many lines of work. It is rumored that a general raise of wages will come into effect this month, but I do not know if it is so or not. But cutting the prices of goods we buy, raises the wages in itself.

Now my sons have both been receiving a monthly wage of 250 roubles. Victor had some over work all summer long, so he earned some over 300 roubles each summer month, up to November. He is now having a two weeks vacation, with full wages paid for the time.

If a worker gets sick, and is attended by a physician, (doctors and hospitals are free) he is paid according to what his wages are. If the worker is a member of his trade union and is an "udarnick"—having made an agreement to work diligently, and has lived up to his agreement—the worker receives full wages during his time of sickness. If not an udarnick then the worker is paid two thirds of regular wages, and if not a member of trade union, then the worker receives only one half of his or her wages while sick. But in every instance the worker need not worry. There is always some money coming. No need of saving money for old age or sickness.

You ask about the kulaks—farmers who have exploited labor, and who do not want to recognize the soviet plan of collective farming and abolishing individual ownership counter-revolutionists, who would be easily enlisted against soviet government). I can say, that their economic power has gone forever. No more are they able to cause food shortage, no more than the individual merchants, for they too have passed into history. The property of the kulaks has been confiscated, the kulaks themselves have been sent to work in some distant locality as wage earners and many of them have become trusted members of the proletariat, and have been given the right to vote and other rights of a citizen on the soviet union. But all of them, the old people, never change, so they are kept within bounds. You know kulaks, private merchants, ministers, priests and other servants of the church and idiots have no right to vote here.

You want to know how much intoxicating drinks are used here. Votka and all kinds of wines are sold in every grocery store here. There are no saloons in Kontupohja, that I know of. But it is a surprising fact, that as a historically noted drunken race as the Russians were, that nowadays very few drunken people are seen on the streets. And when one does see them, they are not always Russians or native Karelian but more often the drunks are foreign workers who came here from America or Finland.

It will not be at all surprising if in the near future, when food and especially fruit and soft drinks are plentiful, that the soviet government will stop selling intoxicating drinks altogether—that is when the time is ripe, so there will be no more moonshine brewing on a large scale, and when it will be possible to keep the moonshine brewers in check.

If there is anything else you wish to ask, or anyone else wants to ask, I will try to answer.

As these sheets are becoming to many for one letter I must stop now and write on the backs of these more personal matters in Finnish, that you all can read.

Best regards and good wishes for the New Year to all the Malcolm and Grygla people.

Selma McCone.

WISCONSIN LABOR FIGHTS "LAW AND ORDER LEAGUE"

Milwaukee—"I do not recognize your organization as other than an unresponsible, anti-social, anti-labor, nefarious group capable only of destruction," was the way Henry Orl, Jr., president of the Wisconsin Federation of Labor, characterized the Beaver Dam Law and Order League, which last week forced Earl Marks, vice-president, International Molder's Union, and Larry Cullen, national organizer for the molders, to leave town while being menaced by a mob.

Ohl went to Beaver Dam immediately after the occurance to confer with local labor officials. The state executive council of the federation is now voting by mail whether or not to transfer the state convention from Beaver Dam to some other city.

Storms Just Passed Cost State $800,000 For Snow Plowing

It has cost the state highway department approximately $800,000 to keep its 11,000 mile trunk highway system open to traffic during the almost continuous storm condition of the past three and half weeks, according to an estimate made by N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner.

"With 400 state plows and 100 rented emergency trucks and tractors going day and night most of the time since late in January, the expense has been a severe strain on highway maintenance funds", Mr. Elsberg said.

"With the 500 units all in operation, the cost runs up to $2,000 an hour. Much of the time the plows have worked 20 hours a day. For every such day the cost is $40,000. These figures are based on an average total cost of $4 an hour per unit operated. The lighter trucks cost less than this, but the average is brought up by the heavy equipment and rotaries. The cost includes labor as well as machinery expense.

"Our snow fighting expense so far this winter is in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, which comes out of a total maintenance budget for the year of only $6,600,000. Our total snow expense last winter was about $900,000.

"If the highway department had not fought to keep the trunks open, drawing heavily on maintenence funds to do so, there undoubtedly would have been general disruption of business and economic life throughout the state and widespread suffering. Without open highways, the Twin Cities and other cities would have been cut off from milk supplies and the smaller towns would have run short of food and other necessities.

"This emergency illustrates the danger of cutting down highway revenues below levels which experience has taught us are safe. There must be a margin of funds over and above routine necessities to meet unpredictable emergencies such as winter storms and summer floods. Any serious crippling of the trunk system would mean famine for hundreds of thousands of persons if continued for more than a few days at a time.

"Even with all that was spent in the past month, there were still isolated cases in which communities did not get as good service from the highway department as we would like to have given them."

National F-L Party For 1936 Predicts Williams

"A national Farmer Labor party must be launched in 1936 rather than in 1940 is the decision of our national committee headed by Congressman Thomas R. Amlie of Wisconsin at its recent meeting in Washington, D. C.," declares Howard Y. Williams, national organizer of the Farmer Labor Political Federation, who has just returned to St. Paul from the meeting of the national committee and a month's organizing and speaking trip in eastern states.

"We believe that the policies of President Roosevelt will fail in the period of 1936-40. We must have a well organized Farmer Labor party on the national scene by 1940 to prevent black Republicanism from coming into power in 1940. That would mean fascism, for the Republicans would fail as completely as the Democrats are going to fail, because neither party has any program beyond liniment and bandages for the dying profit system. Only a new party committed to production for use rather than profit, the economy of abundance rather than scarcity, national social planning in place of rank competition and the gearing up of farms and factories to full production can meet this crisis. We must organize in the states and strike for victory in 1936.

"After an interview with Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota, I am quite confident that he would accept the nomination for the presidency if he were drafted by a representative new party convention. Congressman Thomas R. Amlie of Wisconsin and Ernest Lundeen of Minnesota are possibilities for vice presidential candidates.

"The Farmer Labor party of Minnesota and the Progressive party of Wisconsin should take the lead in the calling of the national convention. Interviews with Norman Thomas and Louis Waldman of the Socialist party and other progressive leaders convince me that they would welcome such a move and cooperate fully in the campaign.

"We now plan the national convention for late June or early July. We believe that at least seven of the nine Congressmen in Minnesota can be elected on the Farmer Labor ticket and probably the full nine. With the two Senators that will give us a delegation of ten or eleven. In Wisconsin we can elect at least nine, and probably the full ten Congressmen on the third party ticket which with the Senator will give us ten or eleven there. We are convinced that we can increase the number over the country to at least thirty Congressmen. If the Guffey Coal Bill, the Wagner Labor Relations Bill and the Social Security Bill are declared unconstitutional and the administration make no determined fight for a Workers Rights Amendment to the Constitution, we may run the number up to seventy five congressmen and in an even race between Republicans and Democrats hold the balance of power in the next Congress.

"Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon, Washington, Oklahoma, at least 750,000 votes in California, are the states that should be carried in 1936 for the new party. Anything can happen by next November. We may win in 1936 and will certainly win in 1940.

"The rapid growth of sentiment for a new national party in the middle west and far west indicates that President Roosevelt can expect little or no support from liberals and radicals in those areas in the next election.

"In Oklahoma our Federation has won the endorsement of the powerful Veterans of Industry, representing 200,000 voters, and has the pledge of that group to independent political action in that state. Similar developments are constantly taking place throughout the country.

"The significance of this revolt against Roosevelt is that the people are demanding something more than the scarcity system the present Administration has attempted to preserve. They are demanding the right to a standard of living equal to the productive capacity of the country, and are unwilling to continue to support the organized sabotage of our productive efficiency."

Mr. Williams reports most encouraging meetings and conferences in the East with state parties in process of organization in Massachusetts, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, West Virginia and Kentucky.

Gains in School Attendance Slump

By W. G. Calderwood

The attendance in the public schools of the United States increased 94,999 per year for the years 1917-1918. Then came an epochal jump and the average annual increase shot up to 507,942 for the twelve years beginning with 1921. That was more than four times the previous attendance growth.

Then came an epochal slump in 1933-34 as compared with 1932. The annual increase fell to only 151,423, or less than one-third the average growth that had prevailed during the 12 preceding years.

The startling increase in public school attendance beginning in 1921 followed immediately upon the adoption of national prohibition, and the slump followed immediately upon repeal. Educators generally credited prohibition with the sharp rise that followed the ban on alcohol. J. W. Crabtree, General Secretary of the National Education Association, made a nation-wide survey under direction of the Federal government, covering juvenile delinquency, drinking and drunkenness in the homes and by the school children, living conditions, and similar problems which influence school attendance and discipline. His exhaustive report reaches this conclusion:

"Conditions in the schools are much better than in 1920 with respect both to drinking and to general behavior. This is doubly significant in view of the fact that high school enrollment has grown since 1920 from two million to more than five million students—an achievement unparalleled in any country in all history. Unquestionably the Eighteenth Amendment has benefited the schools beyond measure."

The Associated Press polled the college presidents of the nation on the results of the dry law in the institutions of higher learning. All but 18 of 255 reported conditions improved. The Parent-Teacher Association published a list of ten benefits which prohibition had brought, most of which were helpful to the schools and school life. Then came repeal with the tragic slump in attendance.

Farm Bureau Seeks New Laws to Protect Prices

Presenting the case of the 100,939 Minnesota farmers whose production plans and economic status was upset by the adverse AAA decision, the Farm Bureau is working through its national office for immediate passage of new surplus control legislation. The Farm Bureau's Washington representative, Chester Gray, believes that the bill now in the legislative hopper, providing for adjusted production thru a soil conservation program, will meet the test of constitutionality and do the job the AAA was doing when it was outlawed by the high court. Federal grants to those practicing soil conservation will replace contract payments under the proposed new act.

Passage of new price-protecting legislation is doomed by the Farm Bureau to be of greatest importance of the eighteen projects upon which it is now actively engaged. Point 2 in its February program is its fight for retention by the government of the processing taxes now held in escrow. Holding that processors are not entitled to the money, the Farm Bureau urges that it be retained by the government and through legislative enactment assigned to agricultural purposes. Immediate payment of AAA contract obligations was demanded.

The Farm Bureau's views on these subjects also are held by the corn-hog and wheat committeemen of Minnesota, who at a meeting in St. Paul on Feb. 18 went on record urging the above points.

Other points on the Farm Bureau's current program seek continuance of the Wheeler amendment for at least 2 more years (3½ per cent on farm mortgages in F. C. A. with farmer control of F. C. A.) rural electrification program, farm to market roads, a managed currency, regulation of commodity exchanges, consumer protection against excessive industrial tariffs, reciprocal trade agreements providing for exchanging agricultural products for imported industrial goods, retention in U. S. department of agriculture of all agencies related to agriculture, farm tenant loans in F. C. A., soil erosion control and reforestation, adequate appropriations for vocation education, appropriation for next convention of International Farm Women of the World, food and drug amendments, neutrality and world peace, support of the constitution as set forth in annual resolutions.

Plaques to be Awarded In State Safety Work

Representatives of all city and county public safety committees will be invited to attend the dinner in the Hotel Lowry, St. Paul, April 14, when plaques are presented to the winners of the 1935 Minnesota traffic safety contest.

The award committee for the contest is headed by N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner, as chairman, according to an announcement by A. V. Rohweder of Duluth.

HIGHWAY PATROL ADDS $169,291 TO STATE FUNDS

The Minnesota highway patrol was instrumental in adding $169,291 to the state revenues in 1935, according to the annual report of Chief John P. Arnoldy. Of this, $122,852 was collected in license corrections and $46,439 in fines. The patrol traveled 3,031,975 miles, by automobile and motorcycle, last year, the report reveals, and aided 1,088,502 motorists on the state's highways. Patrolmen warned 148,671 motorists of various minor traffic violations, tagged 33,475 for illegal equipment and 7,948 for operation with improper licenses and arrested 4,923.

SOME FACTS ABOUT CRIME CONDITIONS

An article by Calvin F. Schmid, assistant professor of sociology at the university of Minnesota, in the Minneapolis Star of Saturday, February 15th casts a light upon the crime situation which would indicate that those who have attempted to blacken the reputation of Minnesota, and Minneapolis, in particular, have done so in a dirty effort to besmirch the state administration in the eyes of our citizens.

The article, based upon statistics covering the period of three years 1932 to 1934 inclusive places Minneapolis in 24th place among thirty of the country's largest cities. Houston, Texas, according to the table, led the country's large cities with 24 murders for every 100,000 population. Strange as it may seem to many, the city of Washington, D. C., is in second place with 23 per 100,000. Chicago is in ninth place with 13 and a fraction, Minneapolis in 24th place with 6 and Milwaukee in 30th place with 2.4 per 100,000.

The state of Minnesota, as a whole, according to the statistics, has one of the lowest homicide rates in the entire union, being in 38th place among the states.

The article is interesting because it shows rather conclusively that certain interests have been willing to stoop to besmirching their state for political reasons. However, the crime situation is alarming in Minnesota as elsewhere in the United States, so that while we may justly resent the efforts to besmirch us, it still behooves every citizen to look seriously into the situation. A comparison with other countries should arouse us to the graveness of the problem.

Thus we find that in the Netherlands during the five year period from 1926 to 1930 there were on the average only three homicides for every million population. The rate in the United States is 29 times as high. In comparison to England, Wales and Scotland our rate is 18 times as high.

Our conclusions may be wrong, of course, but it strikes us as significant that the European countries which have the lowest crime rate are those where unemployment and want are the least prevalent. In our own country where unemployment and relief is most prevalent we lead the earth's civilized nations in crime. It is also significant that for the country as a whole there has been a continual increase in crime since 1900 just as there has been a consistent increase in unemployment during that period. A study of the record would indicate that the crime increase has fluctuated with the unemployment increase.

Referring again to the article quoted above, we find that "In all large American cities, murder tends to concentrate in certain areas. These sections usually coincide with the so-called slums, where vice, suicide, delinquency, bad housing and poverty are prevalent. In Minneapolis, 'Hobohemia'—the area of homeless men—and the near North side where most of the negroes live, have the highest rates."

The above quotation would seem to bear out our contention that poverty and unemployment breeds crime and murder. That being the case, our attentions should be given to the elimination of those conditions which make for crime. It is worthy of note, that the individuals that have besmirched the state administration and intimated that it is in league with murderers, racketeers and rum-runners are the very same that have opposed every effort that the administration has made to equalize the social status, abolish unemployment, foster education and relieve poverty and want. Our first step in eradicating crime would seem to be to eliminate from government those who oppose progress.

HATS OFF TO THE ROAD MONKEYS

The loose charges of graft and inefficiency which have been hurled at the state highway department during the last several years should be pretty well disproved by the dispatch with which our trunk highways have been cleared after the severe storms and heavy snows during the past three weeks.

Personnel and equipment have shown a stamina and reserve power that just could not go hand in hand with graft and inefficiency. Minnesotans have just cause to be proud of their highway department.

WE HAD IT COMING

It is worthy of note that the only publications in the 65th district to take exception to the governor's reference to Waldal as "a bucolic statesman from the upper Hinterland" are those which sponsored his candidacy. They are writhing under the whip, whereas the rest of us are taking the rebuke with the best possible grace since it was well deserved. After all, in view of the splendid record the 65th district has hung up in the past, the governor had a right to expect better of us.

We should heed the advice of the Minnesota Leader when it says that, "the voters of the 65th district would do well to see that Waldal or men of his ilk do not get enough votes at the next election to come within the larceny zone."

THEY ARE EARNING THEIR SPURS

The Forum takes some pride in the fact that it has introduced to the public two new writers who are getting well merited recognition. Ben C. Hagglund, who started his Views and Reviews in the Forum a little over a year ago and E. C. Stengelson, our Washington Commentator, who started his newspaper work writing for the Forum about three months ago, are finding a market for their articles with other liberal papers.

We have received several letters recently commenting favorably on the work of these two writers, and hope that their articles may be syndicated in the near future, so that more people may have the opportunity of enjoying their work.

WE ENTER AS EVIDENCE IN THE COURT OF PUBLIC OPINION:

EXHIBIT "A"

Page three of the Minneapolis Tribune of Saturday, February 15, 1936. A picture of three children captioned "They're Thawed Out Now" and underneath the picture; "A warm stove brought cheer late Friday to these three Minneapolis children, Goldie May, 5; Joseph, 6; and Gloria Vincent, 7, of 1107 Eighth street south. Lacking warm winter clothing, they set out for school with the mercury at —19. Two blocks from home the bitter wind numbed them. They huddled together, clasped hands to keep up their courage. Passersby found them in a corner doorway, took them to a cafe. They spent Friday huddled around the stove at home. Their father, Joseph Vincent, is unemployed."

EXHIBIT "B"

Salaries paid by large industries made public in a report to congress by the treasury department: president of the Archer-Daniels-Midland company, St. Paul, $49,999.92; president, First National Bank and Trust company of Minneapolis, $40,000; president, Great Northern R. R. company, St. Paul, $60,000; president, S. S. Kresge Co., $107,000; vice president, $106,365; treasurer, $107,000; F. W. Woolworth Co., president, $337,479; Prudential Life Ins. Co., president, $100,000; seven managers each from $107,000 to $146,849. The list contains the names of one hundred and sixty executives whose combined salaries would provide an annual income of $1,000 for sixteen thousand families.

MONEY ALSO KEEPS SILENCE

(Hastings Gazette)

The hammer and tongs style of handling the Chicago newspaper publisher by Governor Olson will be especially approved of by those people who fell victims of amoebic dysentry (variously called "tropic sickness" or "fever" or Java disease) while attending the World's fair at Chicago in late summer of 1933.

One of the victims is right here in Hastings, a prominent business man of this city, who attended a dinner at a Chicago hotel while there and at which dinner many people were given the dreadful disease, some of them dying of the attack.

The infection to this Hastings business man came some two weeks AFTER it was discovered that the disease was prevalent in Chicago, perhaps in the very hotel in which the Hastings man so nearly escaped death.

Now we may go back and see what happened to this story in the columns of the Chicago Tribune. It was hushed up (we all know that now) by Col. Robert McCormick, so Gov. Olson states, who prevailed upon other papers to follow the lead of the Tribune, which lays claim to be the "World's Greatest Newspaper."

But the "greatest newspaper" apparently had no trouble in suppressing news of the world's greatest disease and thus it is that Governor Olson lays the whip on the publisher of the Chicago newspaper for failing to warn people about the terrible scourge, the Governor saying that the Chicago publisher "is morally responsible for the deaths of many persons."

"McCormick suppressed the truth because the rotten dollars to be made from the fair were more precious to him than the lives of innocent people who could have been warned."

And then the Governor lays on the whip again in saying "If he (the Chicago publisher) has a conscience, it should be crawling with dysentery germs."

The occasion for the Governor rousing himself from his sick bed at Rochester was the statement made by McCormick the preceding Friday night to daily newspaper publishers meeting in Ohio, in which the Chicago man said, "The governor of Minnesota has lent aid and assistance to gangland in its campaign of murdering editors and all who cross its path."

Of course, we in Minnesota know that such statements are wild and wooly, and those who know McCormick's brand of politics will understand much more than what even Governor Olson said about it all. We might even agree with the vigorous Governor when he said that if a list of the "most infamous persons in the United States was compiled, Bertie McCormick would be at or near the top."

SENDING MISSIONARIES HERE

(Minneapolis Journal)

For years, skeptics have criticized foreign mission activity. They have pointed to the baneful influence of American exploiters who have followed the Christian missionary into supposedly "backward" countries. Such criticisms have run all the way from the serious minded approach to the problem, as represented by that well known work, Rethinking Missions, to the comment of the doubting layman, "Isn't it peculiar that these countries never send missionaries to convert us to the religion of their home lands?"

That rather satirical question is now to be answered in a most unusual way. A few Buddhist missionaries have, in past years, come from the Orient, largely to work among their own kinsmen on America's western coast. But now a noted Japanese Christian has come to America for a tour on which he will bring the Christian message to what he terms "Hell America."

The unusual visitor is Toyohiko Kagawa, a former student at Princeton, a prophet from slums of Kobe, described as the "Wesley of Japan." Kagawa has won renown not only for his addresses and his books—he has published fifteen of them in all. His influence has grown in his homeland because of his leadership as a practitioner of the religion he teaches. He has applied Christian teachings in his life-long work of emancipating the geisha and the lower classes which produced them; he has shared the lot of outcasts and has turned his quarters into a laboratory for the study of the basic cause and cure of slums.

Seven years ago, speaking in Tokyo to representatives of Christianity, Buddhism and Confucianism, Kagawa created an uproar by saying: "Insofar as religion has not developed an adequate criticism of and opposition to the mammonism of modern civilization, there is some opium in it." Followers of all religions in this country can probably well heed some of this doctrine, as it comes back to us, intensified, across the Pacific.

The Case for the Farmers' Union

By Charles D. Egley, Mgr.

Farmers Union Live Stock Commission, So. St. Paul, Minn., and W. Fargo, N. D.

Very frequently in my travels throughout the country farmers say to me: "Why are there so many different cooperatives competing with each other and soliciting our support and business? Why don't you leaders of the different cooperatives get together and cooperate? How do you expect us farmers to cooperate when you, our leaders, don't cooperate?"

"In the live stock business, for instance, we have several cooperative live stock commission firms on the various terminal markets soliciting the farmers' live stock shipments. In the grain, too, there are several regional cooperatives soliciting the farmers' support, even though they all sell through the Farmers National Grain Corporation. And in the distribution of gas and oil, etc., there, too, are several cooperative organizations competing with each other soliciting the farmers' support.

"All of you claim to be cooperatives. All of you claim to be working for the benefit of the farmers. Then why don't you leaders cooperate?"

I say that's a fair question. It deserves the serious consideration of all interested in the building of a social order where justice and equity will prevail. On the face of it, to have these various cooperatives competing with each other does look inconsistent with what their leaders preach. However, after getting into the subject and considering it from all angles the reasons for this apparent inconsistency become simple, and again the solution, of the problem will rest with the exploited classes—the farmers and workers. No one is going to solve this problem for them. So it behooves them to study these questions, support those organizations that have a program which will do the job, and drop the others, which is the only way you can get them together.

Now why so many different competing cooperatives in the same field? I have frequently answered it this way. Why a Democratic and a Republican Party? Both represent the same capitalist system. Neither one of them advocates the abolition of the capitalist system. Then why don't they get together, quit competing with each other, as co-operatives are asked to do?

Simply because they have different programs, different plans thru which they allege the capitalist system can be made to work. One says if you do it my way, or our way, we can enjoy a more abundant life. And the other says, "No, you must do it my way". And so it is with the various cooperatives competing with each other and soliciting the farmers' support; they have different plans which they say must be followed to make cooperation work toward the more abundant life; different roads which they say you must take if you want to go to heaven.

And so when you consider the question from that angle you can divide cooperatives into:

1. Single commodity organizations.
2. Comprehensive, all-embracing organizations.

A single commodity organization in my opinion, is all right as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough. A farmers' elevator will stop the exploitation of the local, privately owned elevator operator. A live stock shipping association will stop the exploitation of the local live stock buyer. A bulk oil station will stop the exploitation of the retail gas and oil dispenser. But farmers and workers are exploited in a thousand other ways which will not be stopped if all we do is to build single commodity cooperatives.

All exploitation, in my opinion, will not be abolished until the cooperative movement is extended to where all business, collectively used, is cooperatively owned and operated. The single commodity cooperative, that is those not affiliated with any larger movement, do not so advocate. They do not teach this need, explain and defend it. They are self-satisfied in their own position. The business is good enough to pay their salaries, and possibly a little dividend to the patron, and they do not see any greater goal—the establishment of a new economic system where exploitation through private profit is abolished.

Before the exploited masses understand that the problem has not been solved by the mere establishment of a farmers' elevator, a live stock shipping association, a creamery or bulk oil plant, or even a cooperative live stock selling agency on the terminal market; that these things are all steps in the right direction but merely a beginning, there must be a comprehensive educational program.

And, therefore, the Farmers Union builds locals where regular meetings are held and public questions, economic and political, discussed, studied and attempts made at correction. These locals are then affiliated into County, state and National organizations where larger groups representing greater territory come together and do more discussing, studying and laying plans for correction of the things that are wrong with our social order.

Then there is the Junior work; our newspapers, our speakers, all a part of a comprehensive educational program so that the exploited classes may learn and discover why it is that those who produce the wealth have none, and what they might do about it. A single commodity organization does not carry on that kind of work. No matter how sincere those connected with single commodity organizations may be, their plans will not correct what's wrong with society.

The Farmers Union is the only economic organization offering a comprehensive program — educational, legislative, national, militant, class-conscious, which in my opinion will bring about the New Day where people can enjoy an abundance instead of scarcity. We do not believe a single commodity organization can do this job.

In time farmers will give this question their careful consideration. When they do, and make up their mind, they will withdraw their support from those organizations which offer no escape from exploitation as a whole. When that support is withdrawn that particular cooperative will cease to function, and cooperators will have learned to cooperate.

The Farmers Union invites a careful study of its program, believing that such a study will convince all fair-minded people that its program is not only sound but the only one that will do the job of bringing the New Day where all can enjoy the abundance possible in this age.

Sad Awakening

Idealists who used to claim that two can live as cheaply as one, are now finding out that even one can't.

Something About Truth

"What is truth?" said jesting Pilate, and would not stay for an answer."—Sir Francis Bacon (suspected of writing Shakespeare's plays).

"If an offence come out of truth, better it is that the offence come than that the truth be concealed." —St. Jerome.

"Some people go through the world pouring out truth as though it were essence of violets. Whereas truth ought to be kept in a small bottle with a red label and marked caution and used only under the direst necessity."—Arnold Bennett.

Here we have the three viewpoints: St. Jerome's idea of "the truth until it hurts," Arnold Bennett's idea of "if it hurts, why have it?" and Sir Francis Bacon's "what difference does it make?"

After all, we do not like to hear truth if it encroaches upon our own pride; but it is a keen weapon to use against an adversary. We are all vulnerable. The idea is to get as much truth as possible ON YOUR SIDE—then, to the battle, and let the sparks fly!

Some Truth About Conquest

The text quoted, the sermon begins. Japan and Italy, two offenders of international peace, claim that their demand for more territory is based on an ever-growing population, which must find room for expansion.

Let us take Japan first. Now that Japan has Manchuria, an immense territory with enough space to harbor five times the present population of the Islands of Japan and not be overcrowded, she ought to be satisfied, but she isn't: Japan reaches out for more and more, until presently she will also have China and large chunks of eastern Siberia, in the opinion of many students of Far East affairs. Why does Japan want the thickly-settled portions of China? Surely there is no room for expansion of Japanese population there.

In 1905 over 300,000 young Japanese were killed off in a war with Russia, to win Korea for the "fatherland", where 200,000 Japs now reside. There are over 100,000 Japanese in the state of California alone. It seems a waste of blood and money.

Italy has had similar experiences. Eritrea, a strip of territory along the Red Sea in Africa, has belonged to Italy for over a generation, yet it is only sparsely settled with Italians, despite the fact that it lies right alongside of Ethiopia, which Mussolini craves for his "starving millions". Moreover, Eritrea has had the benefit of many years of improvement, and has access to the sea.

Not so many years ago Mussolini tried, by every means possible, to get Italian mothers to make incubators of themselves. Prizes went to the most prolific. The childless mother was all but ostracized. Now he must find room for his greatly increased population; so he sends them to war on the Conquering Lion of Judah, perhaps in the hope that (like the case of Japan) 300,000 or so will be killed off to make wretched pioneer homes for 200,000 others.

The Value of Talk

When William Gilette was a young man he thought it would be a profitable enterprise to take down, in shorthand, all that was said in a high-class boarding house where he stayed while studying stenography. The conversationalists to whom he listened were supposedly educated; but "years later", he confessed, "I went over my notebooks, and found that in four months of incessant conversation no one had said anything that made any difference to anybody." Events are made by men who do things.

A WORLD CREATED FOR USE

By Gilbert A. Brattland

Last spring an early robin just back from his winter stay in Vacationland was happily hopping about on the newly sprouting grass. He was content, for the world was all peace, sunshine and happiness to him. Surely he would know.

I walked close and asked him if he knew anything about the depression. He stopped, cocked his head to one side, looked at me inquiringly, then shook his head and hopped away disdainfully. How could he know?

His world and ours are not the same. For him the earth was made only for use.

NORTH DAKOTA STATE MILL TRIPLES SALES IN LAST HALF OF 1935

Grand Forks, N. D.—While many flour mills were showing declines in sales and production the State mill of North Dakota registered a substantial increase in the last quarter of 1935, according to a report just issued.

This state-owned enterprise effectively answered the arguments of foes of public ownership, showing progress far ahead of comparable private enterprises by tripling its sales in the last half of 1935 over the average for the same period for the previous five years.

The mill sold 722,080 barrels of flour from July to December (inclusive) in 1935, as compared to the five-year average of 267,038 barrels for the same six-month period.

Production was nearly doubled The mill turned out 497,101 barrels in the last six months of 1935, compared with the average of 285,578 barrels for the same period in the previous five years.

An active sales drive, in addition to extending the mill's sales in North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin, resulted in establishing new accounts in the eastern market which have provided contracts to carry the present full-time mill operation well into the spring of 1936, according to A. F. Bonzer, general manager.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

One of the least happy traits in human nature is prejudice.

The word "prejudice" means "judgment before."

Prejudice is something we are certain about though we are not in possesion of all the facts.

A man was condemned for being lazy and unconscionably slow. Later, those who condemned him, discovered the poor fellow afflicted with a disease which kept him from moving fast. Some of his condemners were big enough to apologize for their prejudiced attitude toward the man.

All of us have our prejudices, they are as a standing army and navy within our mind by which we argue and defend our opinions.

There are racial, political, religious, prejudices.

Prejudice is a bad poison productive of no good and much harm. Better to examine cause for prejudice than to be indifferent and let it be expressive.

Sometimes an opinion is retained when it cannot be maintained, this is likewise true of prejudice.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelson

The Liggett Murder

The Washington papers are giving considerable space to the accusations of Colonel Robert McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune, made at Columbus the other day — that Governor Olson of Minnesota, is lending aid and assistance to gangland in murdering editors and all who cross its path. He mentioned the recent death of Walter Liggett as a specific example.

—O—

The Chicago colonel views Minnesota and all its dark doings with apprehension and alarm. The whole State, he avers, is in the grip of the ungodly and the iniquitous. Anarchy and terrorism are rampant.

One doesn't need either spectacles or ear trumpet to perceive that it is the scheming and desperate Farmer-Laborites who are behind it all. It is this sinister element which has secured a strangle hold on Minnesota. Under their guidance, the ship of state is scudding swiftly towards the rocks!

—O—

All is not yet wholly lost, however. For there are a few noble-minded souls who are resisting, tooth and claw. Specifically these are the newspapers — the patriotic newspapers, that is to say. By inference, one understands that these are, chiefly, the Minneapolis Tribune, the Minneapolis Journal, the St. Paul Pioneer Press, the Duluth Evening Herald and other high-minded publications . . . In other words, the same staunch, Republican kind as the Chicago Tribune itself.

They are "the only element that is still militant in this country and understands its duties!" says the Colonel.

—o—

But there comes to mind a vague recollection that on rare occasions, there have been law infractions in the Colonel's own windy city of Chicago which were a trifle more serious than, 'for example, spitting on the sidewalk. A glance at 1934 statistics indicates that Chicago's homicide rate for that year was 14 per 100,000 population as against Minneapolis' slightly over 8.

With these figures in mind, the Colonel's remarks concerning crime conditions in Minnesota become at least mildly amusing. Unconsciously one is reminded of that classical, outstanding example of hypocrisy . . . the Pharisee, who said:

"I Thank thee, oh Lord, that I am not like one of these!"

—O—

This commentator does not profess to know whether any considerable number of those who departed this life by violent means in Chicago in 1934 were newspaper editors. But if they took their cue from the Colonel's Chicago Tribune and as cautiously refrained from giving offense to Chicago's criminal element, one may reasonably assume that all of them are still hale and hearty.

—O—

At a meeting addressed by the colonel at Columbus, there was vehement denunciation of all such radical and, of course, wholly un-American legislative devices as the 30-hour week, the utilities control law and the terms of the Social Security Act . . . all of which are measures which have been championed by the same liberal political element as the Farmer-Laborites.

It is, after all, not strange that the colonel foams at the mouth. For, consider what these may not conceivably do to his fat bank account. One suspects that the sun of his patriotism rises and sets in his purse rather than in his heart.

Thinking people will get only a laugh out of his silly accusations against Governor Olson. Indeed, they will realize that in this particular case, at least, the schoolboy's definition of 'Colonel' was very apt. . .

"Its the inside of a nut!" said the lad.

The Prison

By ERNEST CROSBY

And I saw a jail lifting its grimy walls to heaven. And they that passed by looked at it askance, for they said, "It is the abode of sin."

And to them the broad sky and all the earth was fair to look upon, for they saw early buds opening and heard the birds that had come back from the south, and they felt the sun which was now warming the hearts of beasts and plant.

But within the prison, and behind its cold, thick buttresses, and its small, round, triple-barred windows, that looked like tunnels, they hear faint groanings and sighings and much lamentation, and they said, "It is most just for it is the abode of sin."

And I hear a Voice saying, "Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!"

And I looked again, and I saw in the jail those deliverers who in each age saved the world from itself and set it free, and gyves were on their wrists and ankles.

And I saw Israel in the house of bondage before it came forth to preserve Duty for mankind.

Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!

And I saw within the jail them that gave liberty to the slave, and them that unbound the mind of man, and them that led onward to Freedom and Justice and Love.

Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!

And the hosts within held up their arms, and the marks of their shackles were upon them.

But I hid my hands behind me, for there was no mark on my wrist.

Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!

LIBRARY NOTES

Because of intense cold, blocked roads and no competition in the way of out-door recreation this winter, business is even better than usual at the Carnegie Public Library. Bad weather has no tendency to slow up book circulation. On a stormy afternoon one day last week, more than a dozen patrons living at a distance of thirty miles or more exchanged books. Two more school contracts were given out on the same day.

Owing to the heavy demand, late books as well as old favorites are not long on the shelves and there are waiting lists for many. Three copies of Anne Lindgergh's "North to the Orient", with a time limit of seven days on each, are in constant use. Perhaps no other book in public libraries to-day has been singled out as a general favorite as has this one. Some have designated it as a "perfect book" because of its interest, the clear simple style and the personality of the author which is so strongly felt.

"It Can't Happen Here" by Sinclair Lewis, is not a pleasant story but is being much read and discussed. "Magnificient Obsession", "Green Light", and "Forgive Us Our Trespasses" by Lloyd Douglas, are still holding the interest of the public. Probably because of screen productions, some of Dicken's books have been on waiting lists all winter. It has been necessary to purchase extra copies of books by Nordhoff and Hall since "Mutiny on the Bounty" was shown on the screen.

The following books have been received recently: English—Getting Acquainted with Minerals; Young—Be Kind to Yourself; Haslund—Men and Gods in Mongolia; Schlink—Eat, Drink and be Wary; Sandoz—Old Jules; Lawrence—If I Have Four Apples; Stribling—Sound Wagon; Nordhoff—The Hurricane.

HIGH SCHOOL GETS FINN STEAM BATH

Staples—Finnish baths were free to janitors, teachers and students in the Staples high school last week. One of the night shift plumbers, who are changing the heating system from gravity to vacuum force, took a plug from a steam radiator in one of the rooms, left it in the basement, and knocked off work at one a. m. without replacing the plug or turning off the radiator. When the janitor fired up at three a. m., steam began escaping from the radiator. The room was not opened until time for school to start, when freshmen stepped into a steam bath. Water had risen to a height of three inches, and damage to plaster, desks, and molding is estimated at around $150.

We are very much pleased with the new models and shall be very happy to show you and tell you about each in all details, which we believe will be of much interest to most all farm folks.

CAPITOL NEWS REVIEW

(By A. I. Harris)

A report of the Division of Women and Children, Industrial Commission, for the month ending on February 1, indicates that during this period nine firms were prosecuted for violations of various labor laws relating to the employment of women and minors. The prosecutions occurred in Minneapolis, Duluth and Albert Lea. In a classification of the violations, six relate to illegal employment of minors in night clubs in Minneapolis, while three were for employment of women in excess of 54 hours per week.

A decision handed down by Associate Justice Royal A. Stone of the Minnesota Supreme Court in the absence of Chief Justice Devaney strikes a severe blow at the security of school teachers in this state. The judge interpreted the law which says that no school board may discharge a teacher except for cause to mean that the interpretation of "cause" was entirely up to the school board. "The board must determine the question of cause", the judge said, leaving the door open for capricious and arbitrary actions on the part of intolerant members.

The first of the so-called farm market roads has been started by the Minnesota State Highway Department in the grading of 4.3 miles of County Road No. 45 in Otter Tail County.

While many farmers who produced pork and beef on the hoof found 1935 a difficult enough year to make ends meet, Armour & Company reports a net profit of almost $10,000,000.00 after paying all charges, including large salaries to ninth assistant vice-presidents in charge of winding clocks.

Senator Elmer A. Benson, who served with the boys over seas, declares that he will use the $900 which he has coming on his bonus to buy a farm. Not a bad idea with land as cheap as it will ever be.

Bertie McCormick, who was born as a pampered darling of the old Czar's court in Russia, and who has since run the Chicago Tribune in a city that is world notorious for its gangsters and hoodlums, received a rebuff from the Minneapolis Journal the other day. He was told in polite language that it is bad form for a pot to call the kettle black, and that people should cean off their own doorsteps. . . .

Bertie is now engaged in a journalistic effort to blacken the name of Minneapolis, but it is not Minneapolis nor its crime problem as such that interests him. He is after Governor Olson, and he sees in the Minneapolis situation a chance to injure a liberal political movement which he fears will sweep the country eventually . . . and sweep out of power those who are merely puppets of Big Business control. Knowing that mobsters in his own city will "bump off" a person for $10 or up, one would indeed have to be very unsophisticated to believe that Bertie is really shocked by what Mill City gangsters do. He is playing politics according to his own light—in accordance with the only rules that he knows.

Good Government Week, such as tried out in Minneapolis, must have a wholesome effect when the various participating groups are sincere and have no political axes to grind. Unquestionably, some good will result to Minneapolis. Altho some individuals and groups interested in Good Government Week were concerned more with politics than in efficient law enforcement, the great majority had the good of the community at heart. . . .

But when it comes to crime, we seem afraid to go to its causes . . . and this fact impairs seriously the effectiveness of any campaign aimed at curbing lawlessness. . . .

For example, there would be no houses of ill fame if the owners of property, many of whom take active part in Good Government movements, would refuse to rent their property to be used for that purpose. The claim of ignorance on the part of property owners as to the purposes their property is being put to can hardly be accepted. Likewise, there would be no gambling if the bankers would refuse loans on property used as gambling houses. There would be no "cutting plants", no violation of closing hours, no young hostesses in beer parlors if it were not for the "upper lords" would make a profit on it. The underworld gets its example from the overworld of bankers and buccaneering financiers . . .

Ever since the depression, the groups backing Good Government movements have failed to offer a real program which would reduce crime and take people off relief. Crime is caused chiefly by broken homes and economic difficulties. People on relief should be given a chance to work. We must have a program that would give them work, make them self-supporting and self-respecting. . .

Good government cannot be obtained until we have good living conditions for the majority of our citizens. If they have economic security and freedom from want the problem of good government solves itself. If one third of our population are dependent on public charity, we will always have crime waves, houses of prostitution, gambling, and crime in high and low places.

Washington Letter

By Harold C. Hagen

Washington, D. C.,—Taxes, farm relief and neutrality are the big topics of concern and interest to the U. S. Congress these days.

With election coming on Congress is reluctant to pass any new tax measures and it is almost certain that little additional taxes over and above those now in existance will be levied.

It is estimated that between 500 and 600 million dollars will be needed to finance the new farm program. From 110 to 150 million dollars a year may be needed to amortize the bonds to be issued to pay the soldier's service certificates.

The treasury could borrow the money and Congress could let the problems of raising taxes to pay it back until the next session.

However, Congress is somewhat upset about it all. Currency expansionists led by Congressman Patman and Senator Elmer Thomas are demanding issuance of "green backs" with the usual backing of the gold and silver in the Treasury vaults. Others favor the issuance of more interest bearing bonds to raise money and worry about paying for them later. Then there are a few who insist on raising taxes now to pay the bills.

Pushing Farm Program

The Administration's new farm program to take the place of the invalid AAA is going along nicely in both the House and Senate.

Approval of both the Senate and House Agricultural committees has been given and the new legislation is expected to be passed in both branches within a few weeks. The bill, introduced by Chairman Jones of the Agriculture Committee in the House, is for the purpose of promoting "the conservation and profitable use of agricultural land resources by temporary Federal aid to farmers and by providing policy of Federal aid to the States for such purposes". The bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to remove 30,000,000 acres from cultivation with the farmers being compensated for the acreage withdrawn.

Neutrality Bills Delayed

The Administrations proposed neutrality program has met with considerable opposition in the Senate, and it appears that it will be delayed beyond the date, Feb. 29, when the present neutrality act expires. If this happens, Senator Pittman, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has stated that he would ask for an extension of the present act to give Congress time to pass a new legislation.

The Senate and House by one-sided votes have repealed the potato, cotton and tobacco control acts, thereby taking away any opportunity the Supreme Court might have in making any decision on their constitutionality.

More than 1,700 union miners, delegates to the annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America, booed the mention of Al Smith's name during one of their sessions here, several days ago. John L. Lewis, the head of the union which represents 600,000 miners, refused a salary boost from $12,000 a year to $25,000. The other executive heads also refused large salary increases.

The writer of this weekly column, Harold C. Hagen, Executive Secretary to Congressman R. T. Buckler, had the pleasure of attending the North American Wild Life Conference held here in Washington, D. C. Feb. 3 to 7 as one of the 15 delegates from Minnesota. Hagen, a member of the club at Crookston, and O. L. Kaupanger, state secretary, represented the Izaak Walton League of Minnesota at the gathering. A permanent organization was perfected with "Ding" Darling, former head of the Federal Biological Survey, named as President. The conference hopes to coordinate and unify conservation efforts of the numerous wild life and conservation organizations in the nation.

To those who may be interested, Congressman R. T. Buckler will be glad to send out a beautiful portrait of George Washington, size 21 by 27 inches. Any individual or any organization in the 9th District may get one for the asking. The picture is very suitable for framing.

Here are some business figures from "Business Week" which the Democratic party campaign leaders are pointing to with pride: Dividends of department stores increased 31 per cent in 1935 compared to 1934; motor industry made 42 per cent greater profit; banks and insurance companies, 7 per cent; mail order houses, 165 per cent with other business and industrial lines ranging from 1 per cent and up to 165 per cent with the average increase being 10 per cent greater in 1935 than in 1934.

But still there are 11,000,000 without jobs according to a statement made by William Green, the President of the American Federation of Labor. In [illegible] business activity was 21 per cent higher than the same month in 1934 while the employment was only 4 per cent greater than for the same month a year previous.

Veterans who have not yet received their application blanks for the bonus due them who do not find it convenient to get their blanks locally may secure one by writing to Congressman R. T. Buckler, Washington, D. C.

Farmers Union Washington Letter

Legislation to replace the invalidated Agricultural Adjustment Act is making rapid progress through the Congress and probably will be law shortly. The principal objection which the Northwest Farmers Union Legislative Committee has raised is the allocation of the benefits to farmers based on population which would disadvantage our Northwest farmers.

A Bill providing for the payments of contracts entered into by farmers with the three A's has passed Congress and is ready for the President's signature. This Bill also provides for feed and seed loans to needy farmers. Due to the work of this Committee last year blanket mortgages on all property owned by the borrowing farmer will not be required as heretofore. Liens on crops planted with such seed, or cattle fed with feed purchased with money borrowed from this source, only, will be required.

Your Committee is directing its special attention to the curtailment of agricultural imports and a study of trade agreements, also Credit Unions and the Federal Bank.

The Commodity Exchange Bill, which provides for the regulation of grain exchange and protection to cooperatives and will make public markets out of these private clubs, is on the consent calendar and may be up for a vote in the Senate at any time. Telegrams and letters addressed to your Senators at this time will be helpful.

HITCH-HIKER FINDS ROAD A BIT WEARY IN STATE

Blooming Prairie—Shaking with bitter cold and nearly exhausted, a decrepit hitch-hiker was picked up by Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Schisler who played the part of the Good Samaritan enroute home from Austin last week. The man had started hitch-hiking from Mexico to the Twin Cities three weeks ago in response to a radio broadcast informing him of the serious illness of his only living relative, a sister whom he had not seen for eight years. The first leg of his trip was fine through the Sunny Southwest, but in this section he had no clothing suitable for the elements of the last three weeks. His last dime was spent on the trip from DesMoines to Austin, where he had sold his good suit of clothes for three dollars, and he had no overshoes or heavy winter clothing. Marshall Glenn Dennis of Blooming Prairie found a ride for him to the Cities.

REAL GENEROSITY

A group of men, of which a celebrated comedian was the center, were discussing actors, their qualities, and what some conceived to be their weaknesses.

"No matter what is said," remarked a nonprofessional, "no matter what foibles they may have, actors are always charitable."

"Charitable," exclaimed the comedian. "You are right. I never saw one yet who wouldn't take the other's part if he got a chance."

Open and Shut

It was in anatomy class. The junior who hated girls was reciting, pointing out the main characteristics of a skull.

"It is a well-shaped skull," he said. "This woman—"

"Woman!" said the instructor. "Just how do you know that this is a woman's skull?"

"The mouth is open," said the junior who hated girls.

Minute Calculations

"How's your boy Josh doing in college?"

"Fine," said Farmer Corntossel. "He has figured out a scale of prices that will let us know just where we stand when they begin to sell potatoes by troy weight."

Janitor—Yes.

Inmate—Then what is it doing here?

ANOTHER DETOUR

"Cheer up, old chap; they will sprout again next New Year's."

Father (to son at end of school term)—Well, my boy, what results have we this term?

Son—Not so bad, dad. I am next to the top boy when we stand round in a ring.

Suzanne—Still at it? And I heard you were going to cut out smoking on your birthday.

Robert—I was, but I found I had just enough coupons to get this perfectly grand cigarette case.

Daughter—Marry that old rich fool? Why, I'd die first.

Modern Mother—Nonsense, my dear; he's not as strong as he looks. —Pearson's Weekly.

Butcher—Yes, but it'd be a sight tougher if you only paid 10.—Pathfinder Magazine.

ANOTHER PUZZLE

Turtle—What is?

Chick—You say you're fifty years old, and you're not out of your shell yet.

Cash and Carry

George—Doesn't your father believe in the cash-and-carry system?

Gracie—Sure. Every time he leaves the house with any cash, they have to carry him home.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

By ROBERT AMES BENNETT

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the airways emergency station. In it are Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to the platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows her contempt for Garth.

CHAPTER II.—Through Garth's guidance the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to take a chance in investing a small amount. Sensing the treachery that lies ahead, Garth secretly removes a small part from the motor of the plane.

CHAPTER III.—Huxby and Lilith taunt Garth with his "gullibility," but their tone soon changes when they try to start the crippled plane. Returning to shore they try to force Garth to give up the missing part. Garth manages to set the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls, where it is wrecked. He points out to the enraged trio that he is their only hope in guiding them out of the wilderness, and to kill him would be fatal to all.

CHAPTER IV.—Garth begins the work of preparing for the long journey. He insists that the others help. Moccasins must be made, and Ramill and his daughter hardened for the hardships ahead in their toilsome trek to the outpost on the Mackenzie.

Garth led across to the east side of the trough. After every halt he started the portly millionaire on again as soon as he could draw a deep breath. They kept plodding up the tundra slope until at last Mr. Ramill's legs gave out. He staggered and collapsed. He lay, purple-faced and quivering, spent.

When able to speak, he gasped an appeal: "Ka-quit! 'U'll kill—me!"

The exhausted man turned flat on his back and basked. Within a few minutes he drowsed off. Garth let him nap a long two hours, then started him on up the long climb.

Three hours later found them still below the lower end of the glacier. Garth at last called a halt to the climb. He headed back.

Midway down to timberland, Ramill collapsed, so utterly spent that he could not get up even after a long rest. Garth took him on his back and packed him on down to the camp, without a halt.

Huxby and Miss Ramill were feasting. They had pried the moose leg out of the fire hole and broken off the clay shell. The meat had baked to juicy tenderness. Even the gristle was melted into gelatine.

When Garth laid her father in the leanto, the girl brought a big chunk of the best meat. But the millionaire climber was too exhausted even to eat. His daughter turned upon Garth.

"Another of your damnable jokes! He's dying! You've killed him!"

Garth smiled approvingly. "So, after all, you're capable of feeling a little concern for someone else than yourself. Boil the cup two-thirds full of water, and put in enough of that sweet tea to cool it for drinking."

"The tea is hot already. I've kept back Dad's share. I'll give it to him straight."

"You'll warm that water."

The mining engineer stood up. "I've told you to speak respectfully to Miss Ramill."

Garth paid no more attention to him than to the buzz of a mosquito. The girl looked expectantly at her fiance. He stood waiting for Garth to apologize. When Garth neither replied nor so much as glanced around at him, the engineer's cold assurance gave way to doubt. He turned and went down to the lake.

Miss Ramill's eyes widened. She glanced from his stiff back to the buckskin clad shoulders that had so lightly toted her father into camp. All this had been a matter of seconds. In another moment she was darting over to the rill with the tin cup.

When she came to the leanto with the almost scalding hot mixture of boiled water and tea, her father muttered, beneath groans, that he did not want it. "No—no! Oh-oh-h! Let me die—in peace!"

Garth heaved up the lax head and shoulders, and held the cup to the quivering lips. "Drink, or I'll pour it down your throat."

A few minutes later the "dying" millionaire began to eat. He bolted down the juicy tender meat until sleep overtook him in the midst of a bite.

Though spoiled, Lilith was far from being a fool. She had begun to realize that to get what she wanted, something more than wishing was necessary. Her father had gone over to Garth. Even Huxby had failed her.

The rub was over for Garth. Miss Ramill's surrender meant that he was now the acknowledged master of the party. Huxby had also admitted the fact by going off, instead of following up his implied threat of attack. He, however, would require watching.

After eating his fill, Garth took to Huxby's bed, beside the smudgefire. He wakened to find that the sun had taken its northern dip and was just slanting up again above the mountain crests. It had been under much longer than in June. The summer was getting well along.

Huxby had stayed on watch to keep the fire going. He met Garth's offhand good morning with a show of civility. His cool reasoning had brought him to the realization that nothing was to be gained by upstaging Garth.

When Miss Ramill left the leanto, Garth stooped in under the low roof and began to rub her father's knees and hips. The millionaire groaned that he had been stricken with a terrible attack of lumbago and rheumatism. It was impossible for him to move.

Heedless of the plaint, Garth rolled the complainer out beside the cold baked leg of moose. The "sick" man ate more than either his daughter or Garth. Afterwards, insistent urging and the promise of an easy work-out persuaded him to get on his feet. They wandered around through the woods, with frequent pauses in the glades.

When, several hours later, they returned to camp, Miss Ramill had completed one moccasin and was doggedly stitching at its mate. Huxby came down from the trough with the gold pan. Garth melted the last of the moose fat in it and fried a heaping mess of mushrooms. For salad, he shook a quantity of pleasantly acid sorrel from the bottom of his pail. With berries for dessert, the meal became a banquet. While it lasted there was a general glow of good feeling. Even Huxby spoke pleasantly to Garth.

As before, Garth turned in at the same time as Mr. Ramill. He wakened to find the first pair of moccasins finished. The girl had met his terms.

He gave Huxby the moss bed, and started to collect flattish stones as heavy as he could toss. When he had pitched a dozen or so upon the cache platform, he strung the smoked slices of meat on rawhide thongs. Raking aside the smudgefire, he stood on the rack and tied all the meat close up under the cache platform.

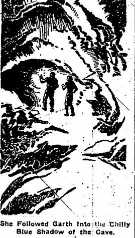
He then climbed upon the platform and piled the stones on the tie-thongs where they came around the poles. That would keep wolverines or other pilferers from gnawing the rawhide to let the meat fall. No fourfooted creature could now get at the meat on the under side of the platform, and even ravens would have difficulty stealing much of it. To complete the job, Garth pulled off the cross poles of the smoke rack.

For breakfast, the party finished the baked leg of moose. As Garth had foreseen, his three city camp mates had developed camp appetites. Better still, they were less irritable. Their craving for drink and tobacco had begun to lessen.

At timberline Huxby went up the trough with the gold pan. Garth headed again for the glacier. This time Mr. Ramill did not pant and gasp so hard, nor did he have to stop so often. He managed to climb to the lower end of the glacier.

While he rested in a sunny nook on the rocky side of the lateral moraine, his daughter went down in front of the glacier with Garth. They came to the channel where the milky stream gushed out of a tunnel cave in the blue-white ice.

Garth pointed to a shelf of rock on the near side of the stream. He walked into the cave along the smoothly polished ledge. Lilith Ramill shuddered and glanced up fearfully at the steep over-hanging ice face that seemed about to crash down. Yet after a moment's hesitation, she followed Garth into the chilly blue shadow of the cave.



She Followed Garth Into the Chilly Blue Shadow of the Cave.

Several yards from the entrance Garth stopped before a narrow side hole that opened above a waist-high uprise in the bedrock. He reached in and picked up a bundled white skin. Out in the sun he opened the skin and showed a piece of frozen meat.

"How's that for cold storage?" he said. "Killed a young mountain sheep on my way out last month. Thought I'd test the glacier. Looks as if it's a safe meat house. No chance of spoiling, and not even a wolf had ventured inside."

Miss Ramill said nothing. She saw no reason to consider the cave of the slightest interest. There was, however, the meat. She suggested that if it was not spoiled, it would make a change from the moose meat. This proved true.

The descent had been made by Ramill without aid. There was no need to support, much less backpack him. He had really begun to get a start in training. To Garth this was all the more reason for pushing the millionaire the harder.

In the week that followed, he alternated more climbs with trips around into the muskeg swamps. He led his sweating, swearing charge over niggerhead grass, where the heavy-bodied city man had to jump nimbly from one big tussock to another or take a tumble.

Miss Ramill tagged along on these grueling hikes. She also made another climb up the gulch. Garth cached in the cave the hundred pounds of smoked moose meat he had brought up on his pack-board. He then led on up the glacier, halfway from its foot to the top of the pass. That gave the three climbers some real ice work. Coming back, Garth knocked three brace of fool hens from spruce limbs with a stick.

The half dozen grouse made a pleasant change. But even with a pail of salmon berries for dessert they proved a scant meal for the four meat-eaters. The last leg of moose had already been baked and eaten, the tongues broiled, and the second muffle stewed. The remainder of the smoked meat would not last long. So far, Garth had not interfered with Huxby's all-day panning out of the platinum alloy. He had not even asked to look at the take of precious metal. Food was a different matter. Instead of shooting another moose, he called upon Huxby to join in a caribou hunt.

A band of the big animals had drifted along the tundra terrace over towards the glacier. Garth counted 15. He waited until the band came within 75 yards. He then let drive, shooting rapidly yet with careful aim. One after another dropped, each with a bullet through the head. The stupid beasts stared in the direction of the sharp reports. But they could see nothing. The sixth went down before the nine survivors wheeled and clattered off in panic-stricken flight.

The flaying was well under way when Huxby and Miss Ramill came hastening aslant the tundra ahead of Mr. Ramill. The girl eyed the clean delicious-looking white fat on the first flayed body. "That looks good, Alan! Vivian, you can go back to your mining. Dad and I will help here."

Her father called out a panting suggestion for Huxby to wait and carry down a load of meat.

"No need," Garth said. "Don't stop, Huxby. Most of this venison is going on ice. None will be allowed to spoil."

The engineer did not linger. He had looked none too well pleased over the girl's familiar use of Garth's first name. Along with his displeasure about this, there could be no doubt of his eagerness to get back to the platinum panning.

When Garth finished the flaying of the caribou, he started to dress out the bodies. Greatly to his astonishment at the cutting up of the second caribou, Lilith took the belt-ax and began to help. Mother Nature had cracked the polished shell of artificiality in which the pampered heiress had been encased. The girl's few days in the Wild had awakened primitive instincts ground deep into the nature of woman during the remote past of mankind.

So, upon reflection, Garth's amazement passed. He had managed to cover it, even at the first, when Lilith Ramill took the belt-ax in her slender hand and severed the neck bone of the caribou with a single blow.

Her father was the one who stared. He sat watching the girl's quick, eager wielding of the hand-ax, his mouth slack, almost agape. Garth could only surmise how she had always been coddled and pampered. Her father knew it. He knew how, since her childhood, she had been wrapped about with silken luxury, waited upon by attentive servants, petted and spoiled.

The millionaire had been born on a farm. He could recall seeing his mother help butcher sheep and hogs. But she was a farmer's wife. Lilith would not have known how to prepare a spring chicken for the pan. And now she was cutting up caribou.

Aside from an occasional word of direction, Garth said nothing. When he finished dressing out the fifth carcass, he handed his knife to his eager helper, packed a load of meat, and carried it to the ice cave.

Down in the gulch bottom he chose a pothole stone that would hold perhaps three quarts. In the bowl he coiled a wick of twisted dry caribou moss, piled in caribou fat, and lighted the wick. When the fat melted, the wick burned with a strong steady flame. Caribou ribs furnished a grating on which to broil steaks. The fat meat was deliciously tender, its flavor between venison and beef.

When even Mr. Ramill could eat no more, Garth carried the stone lamp into the ice cave. Upon his return, he had Mr. Ramill and Lilith look close at the caribou skins.

"You see they are hair, not fur. But every hair is hollow. Nothing is warmer than a caribou parka. In fact, the winter coat is too warm to be worn. That is why I killed six now, instead of one. You have never wintered in the North."

Mr. Ramill tensed as if prodded. "Wintered? You can't mean to infer you expect to stay on here. We have your promise to take us out."

Garth answered Mr. Ramill: "You have my promise—more's the pity. A winter a la Eskimo would be a wonderful experience for Miss Ramill. However, she will, of course, prefer to go back to jazz and cocktails, to paint, powder and lipstick."

She flared: "And rid of you!"

CAR RUNS OVER BOY, BUT HE DOESN'T MIND

Benson—Joe Hawkins, Benson high school student, can take it. Joe was leaving the high building recently with his coat collar pulled up high in an attempt to cut down the frigid blasts somewhat. As he stepped from the sidewalk into the street, an automobile driven by R. W. Richards came along from the west. Joe didn't see the car and was struck and run over by the rear left wheel, which passed over him just below the hips. The result was that Joe's pants were torn at one knee. When he returned to school for the afternoon classes he said it just "ached" a little.

London, England.—The gigantic London Cooperative Society began the new year with a drive to add as many new members as there are minutes in the shopping hours in January. Early reports indicated that the drive would far exceed its goal. Twelve thousand new members were enrolled in the first four days of the campaign. The London Cooperative Society now has more than a half million individual members.

Tupelo, Miss.—Tupelo, first city in the country to distribute electric power produced by TVA, celebrated the second anniversary of the signing of its contract with the government by initiating a 10 per cent rate cut.

Public Ownership and Co-operative News Notes from Far and Near

DENMARK CO-OPS. GIVE NATION ECONOMIC SECURITY BANISH WANT

If you take the figures of the department of agriculture you find that the dollar spent by the consumer for ten foods in the United States in 1934 was divided 38.5 cents to the farmer and 61.5 cents to distributors and processors. But if you take the latest figures available for Denmark (those in the Danish Statistical Yearbook for 1934) you find that in 1933 the Danish consumers' dollar was divided 63.4 cents to the farmer and 36.6 cents to distributors and processors. In short, the position of farmers and distributors in the two countries is exactly reversed.

Not only do the Danes produce and market cooperatively; they also buy cooperatively. In 1931 there were 1,825 consumers' societies, numbering 331,000 members with an annual turnover of 134,700,000 kroner. These societies began in the country, but are now rapidly spreading to the cities.

The efficiency of cooperative marketing was convincingly demonstrated in 1910 when American corn was sold at considerably lower prices in the cooperative stores in Denmark than in the feed stores of New York. By the cooperative method distribution cost is reduced to handling charges.

Credit societies are owned and controlled by the farmers in the same manner as are other cooperative enterprises. There is also a strong cooperative commercial bank owned by the cooperative societies,

No Great Wealth; No Poverty

The economic set-up of Denmark is such that it is practically impossible for anyone to amass great wealth. This is because the bulk of the profits, which go in other countries to the business people, are returned to the producers. As economic power always carries with it political power, we find that the farmers and the laborers are the ruling classes of Denmark. These "common people"—and that includes the vast majority of the Danes—have slowly made up their minds to control the conditions of their living and to make the machinery of life subordinate to the spirit of life; they have slowly learned to do this. A true cooperative society is not gained in a day.

The railroads, the telegraphs and the long distance telephone lines are owned and operated by the state.

CONSUMERS' UNION OF U. S. APPLIES FOR N. Y. STATE CHARTER

New York.—The Consumers' Union of the United States, new nonprofit organization to supply information on consumers' goods and services, has applied for a New York State corporation charter.

The organization was formed after Consumers' Reseach refused to grant demands of its striking employees. Directors of C. R. have so far refused to obey a decree of the New York National Labor Relations Board that it rehire three employees discharged for union activity.

The first bulletin of Consumers' Union, which will contain reports of research work and recommendations on consumers' goods will appear about March 15.

Twelve former employees of C. R. are already on the staff. Prof. Colston E. Warne of Amherst College heads the organization. Arthur Kallet, co-author of "100,000,000 Guinea Pigs," President; Heywood Broun of the American Newspaper guild, and Dewey Palmer, former chief technician at C. R., are directors. About 60 prominent liberals are sponsors.

CONSUMERS CLUB BUYS CO-OPERATIVELY

Nutley, N. J.—Members of the Nutley Consumers' Club reaped the first benefit of the cooperative buying movement last week when Allston Pulsford, club treasurer, distributed the first dividends. Altho the dividends total only about $15 the members believe the occasion marks a real start toward local consumer cooperation.

The club was founded last August by Mrs. John Dobbs of Nutley, now its secretary. The aim is to obtain lower prices on high grade commodities by special arrangement with local stores. The vendors agree to supply members with a particular product and to pay the club a commission for producing this business.

The goods are bought individually by members at the market price, but the vendor, at the end of a stated period, pays the club a commission on the sales. It is this commission which was distributed to the members Tuesday night in proportion to the amount of their purchases. The largest dividend will be about $3, but as products are added a considerable saving is expected in the buying of members.

Superior, Wisconsin.— Following the traditional cooperative policy of supporting the labor movement whenever possible, the Central Cooperative Wholesale helped bring about a settlement, favorable to the workers, of the lockout in the Duluth, Minnesota plant, of the Western Paint and Varnish company. The plant was closed by the management December 18 after the union had protested the discharge of workers who had been active in union organization.

Ivan Lanto, buyer for the Cooperative which purchases a large and growing volume of products from the manufacturer, notified the management that the cooperative wholesale, being friendly to organized labor, would regret any labor discrimination at the Duluth plant and "would be glad" to have the organizing efforts of the employees succeed. The Western Paint and Varnish Company Industrial Union was granted recognition, re-instatement of all workers without discrimination, time-and-a-half for overtime, and seniority rights. The union expressed its appreciation to the cooperative for helping it win the strike.

Senator Benson to Seek F-L Endorsement for Governor

"Since my appointment to the United States Senate by Governor Olson, I have been repeatedly urged by many Farmer-Laborites and Farmer-Labor organizations to announce my political plans. I have refrained, believing that to be entirely a matter for the Farmer-Labor Convention or the Farmer-Labor voters to determine."

"The Farmer-Labor Association's state convention is less than six weeks away. County conventions soon are to be held. I appreciate the desire of the party to clarify the political situation at the earliest possible date."

"Therefore, I announce that I am a candidate for the endorsement of the Farmer-Labor Party for Governor of Minnesota."

"Governor Floyd B. Olson definitely will be the Farmer-Labor candidate for United State Senator. He will be endorsed unanimously for the seat I now hold by his appointment. The voters of Minnesota will elect him overwhelmingly, and send him to Washington, that the state and nation may have the benefit of his brilliant statesmanship and matchless eloquence."

"The issues of the campaign will be determined by the Farmer-Labor Convention and incorporated into a party platform."

"I appreciate to the fullest the confidence placed in me by governor Olson and the State Committee. I have striven and shall always strive to merit that confidence."

"I have never before sought public office. I cannot and shall not now neglect the duties entrusted to me here, in order to further my own candidacy. I shall leave that to friends in the rank and file of the Farmer-Labor Party."

"I do not wish that any activity undertaken in my behalf should cause the deflection of one true liberal from the ranks of the Farmer-Labor party, or impede by the slightest degree my party's success in the coming election. I hope that all contests within the Farmer-Labor ranks may be settled fairly and amicably, without bitterness or rancor, keeping in sight the greater goal next November. No sincere Farmer-Laborite will let personal ambition overshadow that goal."

"I hope that should there occur any premeditated effort toward disruption and discord it will be detected."

"After the state convention and after the primaries, the Farmer-Labor party will enter what may be the most crucial fight in its history."

"I am not seeking battle within my own party, but unity nd solidarity."

"I wish to make this perfectly clear: I have been in this movement since boyhood. I have been in it because I believe in it—believe in its principles, have confidence in its program, and see in it the only hope for the social and economic reforms that must prevail if Democracy is to be preserved, and the American people restored to the inalienable rights that America's founding fathers intended should be theirs".

"It is my honest desire that not one member of my party should feel that either he or the party owes me the nomination. Personal ambitions have no place in the present picture. I am not seeking my party's endorsement because I feel that it owes it to me. The party's choice of its candidates for office is not a question of personal ambitions or individual rewards. The party should select as its nominee for Governor the man who, it believes, can best lead it to victory and most faithfully administer that office when elected."

"Should the Farmer-Labor Party feel that I am that man, I shall be honored to have it place my name before the voters of Minnesota as the Farmer-Labor candidate for Governor."

ELMER A. BENSON.

SCHOOL TEACHER GIVES LIFE IN LINE OF DUTY

Montevideo— A conscientious school teacher held her life less than her duty at Montevideo last week. Miss Cleo Everson, teahing in a rural school in Woods township, died from overexhaustion and a heart attack, due to sacrificing herself in one of the most honorable of professions. Miss Everson had walked three quarters of a mile to the schoolhouse through deep snow drifts and the intense cold. After building the fire in the school building she called school to order, but became ill during the morning hours and was taken home. She died the next day from the exhaustion her efforts had produced, and another unsung heroine passed on to a reward where school teachers must receive the acknowledgment their services have due.

DEER IS DISABLED BY METAL RING ON HOOF

Bemidji—A disabled five year old buck deer, on whose right front hoof a two inch ring had encircled itself when the deer apparently stepped into the ring, was killed at Itasca State Park under the direction of game wardens. The piece of metal around the deer's hoof was a cap from a two inch pipe, the sort to protect the threads of a pipe in shipment. Last year this same deer broke a hind leg and hobbled about on three legs. Recently it was seen to have something wrong with its foreleg as well as the hind leg, and its progress was so wobbly that it was thought best to shoot the animal. Pressure of walking on the foot which was encircled by the ring had made the foot extremely sensitive to pain, the ring having worn into the animal's flesh.

WATCH REPAIR MAN LEAVES WITH CUSTOMERS' WATCHES

Lake Wilson—An itinerate watch maker and repair man has "tinkered" with the watches of residents of Lake Wilson a little too much, and is being sought by authorities. E. L. Bliss, who makes his living traveling from town to town repairing clocks and watches, dropped in on Lake Wilson and Iona and Avoca, nearby. His work was guaranteed, he said. Anyone who entrusted a watch to his expert hands would never have to worry about it again. It is true that his customers have been relieved of the worry of whether their timepieces would keep good time, but they have been left with the worry of wondering where their watches were. Bliss apparently decamped with a collection of time-pieces and cannot be found. One of the watches was valued at $40.

FAMILY SAVED FROM MONOXIDE GAS TRAP

Grand Rapids—A narrow escape from death was chronicled for the A. K. Seckinger family when snow was blown into a hard drift over the pipe which carried off the fumes from a gasoline engine and carbon monoxide gas was forced back into the house. The engine operates a home electric lighting plant and back pressure from the exhaust forced out the packing in the walls and permitted the deadly gas to seep into the rooms. Mrs. Seckinger and two children had retired, when the youngest daughter became violently sick. Seckinger realized that the gas must be present, althought it could not be detected by taste or odor, and pulled open the windows. Had the family retired a few minutes earlier, all would probably have been killed.

Comment on the Week's News
From American Commonwealth Federation

Washington has had a taste this week of what is likely to happen when in pursuit of the facts about matters of public interest congressional investigators invade the "Seats of the Mighty" and uncover facts which powerful men can not afford to have see the light of day.

Briefly stated, this is what occurred. Senator Nye's committee investigating the munitions industry had its searchlight upon the bankers for war mongers and war makers. It had previously brought to light astounding evidences of corruption, of fabulous profits in government contracts for munitions, and of interference in efforts to bring about international arms reductions agreements. Reputations great and small had been shattered in the remorseless light of publicity.

For a week while Mr. J. P. Morgan and his partners squirmed on the witness stand of the Senate Committee, newspaper editors in their editorial offices squirmed also. Editors who had not dared to object to the investigation finally began timidly to suggest that in spite of the evidence the old fables regarding the war must have some validity. As fact after fact was brought out from the Morgan partners pointing to commercial motives involving the United States in the World War, the protests grew stronger. And the evidence continued to pile up: the Morgan banking firm had sided with England from the beginning of the war in 1914. It had sources of confidential information from the United States government. It manipulated credit to suit its own international policy.

Editorials began to object to the imputed assumption by the investigators of economic motives in the United States entrance into the war. An attempt was made by Mr. Morgan himself to revive the atrocity theory as the compelling motive for participation by the United States in the war. Against such protestations stood certain undisputed documents, among them the famous telegram from Ambassador Walter Hines Page, warning President Wilson that the maintenance of America's pre-eminent trade position required her entrance into the war.

The Storm Breaks

With such damning evidence being developed, it was no surprise when a small group of senators seized upon what they considered a favorable issue, distorted and misrepresented a statement by Senator Nye in committee, and made a great patriotic issue out of a drive to stop the investigation. The issue on which they seized was evidence developed by the committee that President Wilson knew about the secret Allied treaties for the division of spoils after the war, although he told the Senate that he had no such knowledge.

It would be naive to suppose that some other excuse for an attack on the investigation would not have been [illegible] occurred. [illegible] pose that the protection of good name of Pres. Wilson is really the object of the outburst in the Senate on Thursday and Friday. Senator Byrnes of South Carolina more or less revealed the attitude of the objecting senators when he declared that the committee had not developed a single bit of information that was not already known.

If this is a correct statement, it is a sad admission from Senator Byrnes. If he knew all the facts developed by the committee, and nevertheless kept silent during the appropriation of billions of dollars for war purposes, he was extraordinarily obtuse to ordinary considerations of civic morality, because among the thousands of facts brought out by the committee there is to be found such evidence as the following:

1. That one aircraft company, manufacturing largely for the government, accumulated assets and earnings exceeding one million times its original investment in eight years.

2. That profits exceeding total wage payments were made on a number of Navy Department shipbuilding awards.

3. That American manufacturers produced the arms which were used by Hitler's private army in Germany.

Mostly Heat

Senator Nye and his associates have been attempting to turn on the light. His opponents have very definitely turned on the heat. Senator Connally, of Texas, suggested that Senator Nye belonged in "some low house", and Senator Glass thundered indignantly against the committee for the "shocking assault made on his (Wilson's) character and the attempted impeachment of his integrity and veracity."

If we separate the indignation from the issues involved, it becomes a bit difficult to justify the position of Senator Glass, Senator Connally, and their associates. Certain things in 1917 led us into a war. The committee has been endeavoring to find out what those things were, as a guide for future policy. Evidently Senators Glass, Connally, and their associates do not want the committee to complete the investigation. They object to the record not because of the facts themselves, but because of the character of the facts and where they lead.

If the attack upon the committee is successful in squelching the investigation, it will be a matter of great satisfaction to the Morgan partners. It will be a great loss to the American people, who were led into a war which, it is now suspected, was fought for purely commercial reasons, particularly to retrieve the Morgan fortunes; a war which certainly enriched a class of people who are now industriously building up the mechanism for a new war, who have broken up peace conferences and disarmament pacts and who have armed European and South American war makers.

MELBY VOICES A DEMAND FOR TAX REFORMS

GAG RULES KILLED TAX MEASURES

Local Club Favors Nat'l. Third Party in 1936 Campaign

The Thief River Falls farmer-labor club heard an interesting discussion on the work of the special session of the legislature by Representative J. O. Melby of Oklee at its meeting on Friday evening of last week. After discussing the labors connected with the passage of the old age pension bill, Mr. Melby stated that due to the gag rules invoked by the reactionary majority it was impossible to get consideration for any tax reforms. The senate, Mr. Melby said killed the unemployment insurance bill, so that it will be impossible for the state to avail itself of the federal aid in this direction.

Discussing tax reforms, Mr. Melby suggested that the time is here for rebuilding on more scientific lines the tax structure of the state. He explained at some length the plan of abolishing the present plan of levying on real estate and personal property the balance required for governmental purposes in excess of receipts from the fixed tax rate on incomes, and suggested that the method be reversed so that real estate and personal property would be taxed a small fixed rate and that the net income and inheritance tax be levied ac-

Workmen Suggest New Work Projects

The Workmens Protective league is continuing its growth with twenty new members being admitted to the organization at the meeting on Monday evening.

Nick Waldorf was selected as chairman of the evening and after some discussion the project committee was instructed to contact the city council for the purpose of launching projects on the following city improvements: Water mains extension on the east side and sewer mains on Arnold avenue from 1st street, south five blocks; storm sewers on Conley avenue; either a sewer extension or a sewage disposal plant to eliminate the foul odor from the river along Riverside avenue and the tourist park. Attention was also called to the bad condition of the city drinking water and suggestion made that the council take adequate measures to rectify the condition.

A small amendment to the constitution was offered and laid over for action by the next meeting of the league.

Work Scheduled On T. H. 59 This Year

A. M. Graves, highway divisional engineer for this division, was in the city on Wednesday on matters of business in connection with the highway department.

Asked what the highway department's program for this district is this year, Mr. Graves stated that some work will be done on T. H. 59 between here and Noyes, that in fact some of this has already been let. Fifty-nine from here to Erskine has been surveyed, Mr. Graves stated and it is hoped that some work may be done on this also.

Asked what hopes there are of getting some construction work done on T. H. No. 1 east of the city, Mr. Graves stated that it is well known to the department that the traffic on this road is heavy and that if it should be possible to do so, the department will certainly wish to make improvements on this stretch. He pointed out however, that the heavy snows and storms this winter has taken a terrific toll of highway funds and that consequently the construction work engaged in may be correspondingly curtailed.

FORAGE CROPS NEED MORE ATTENTION

Turkey Expert to be Here During the First Week in March

The importance of using the heaviest seed available this year cannot be too strongly emphasized, was the statement made by W. W. Brookins, Extension Agronomist, at meetings held at Thief River Falls and St. Hilaire last week.

Mr. Brookins pointed out that although there is no relationship between test weight and germination, the seedlings from heavier wheat will posses much more vitality. Mr. Brookins advised farmers who have to use light wheat to grade it up by heavy fanning. Considerable improvement can be effected in this way. A germination test should be made on all grain intended for seed.

Wheat tests may be obtained by sending samples to the Northwest School of Agriculture at Crookston. Wheat and other seeds will be tested if sent to the Seed Testing Laboratory at University Farm, St. Paul.

Seeks Governor's Chair

Lieut. Gov. Hj. Petersen

Lieutenant Governor Hjalmer Petersen of Askov announced last week that he is a candidate for the farmer-labor endorsement for governor by the state convention which convenes in March.

The party, Petersen said, "is sorely in need of discipline and that I shall provide."

Asserting that he has entered the race because he believes that as governor he can render a greater service to the party and to the state of Minnesota, Lieutenant Governor Petersen stated, "It may be a 'great honor and privilege' to be the party's candidate for governor, but having been elected to legislative positions several times and having passed thru the apprenticeship of being addressed 'honorable', that holds little, if any appeal."

"If elected governor, department heads under my administration will toe the mark and be held responsible for those under them. Inefficiency and lack of co-operation will not be tolerated."

MELBY VOICES A DEMAND FOR TAX REFORMS

GAG RULES KILLED TAX MEASURES

Local Club Favors Nat'l. Third Party in 1936 Campaign

The Thief River Falls farmer-labor club heard an interesting discussion on the work of the special session of the legislature by Representative J. O. Melby of Oklee at its meeting on Friday evening of last week. After discussing the labors connected with the passage of the old age pension bill, Mr. Melby stated that due to the gag rules invoked by the reactionary majority it was impossible to get consideration for any tax reforms. The senate, Mr. Melby said killed the unemployment insurance bill, so that it will be impossible for the state to avail itself of the federal aid in this direction.

Discussing tax reforms, Mr. Melby suggested that the time is here for rebuilding on more scientific lines the tax structure of the state. He explained at some length the plan of abolishing the present plan of levying on real estate and personal property the balance required for governmental purposes in excess of receipts from the fixed tax rate on incomes, and suggested that the method be reversed so that real estate and personal property would be taxed a small fixed rate and that the net income and inheritance tax be levied ac-

Rusty Lips Get Workout In Monday Evening's Rehearsal

ED. EGERMAYER IS NEW BAND DIRECTOR

Has Long Experience In Leading Bands and Orchestras

Twenty-two bandmen turned out for the first meeting and rehearsal in the formation of a new municipal band on Monday evening. Several others interested sent word that other appointments or the weather conditions kept them away and it is expected that the organization will number about thirty members when it is completed.

Ed. Egermayer, the new band director secured by the city has been busy sorting and classifying the city's music library and attending to details of getting the new organization under way. He has established an office in the auditorium, on the second floor, south side over the stage and extended a welcome to bandmen and others interested to call and get acquainted. He is at the office every day, he stated, and will be glad to give any assistance that he can to help bandmen over any difficulties that they may experience. There appears to be a lot of good material here, he believes, and he hopes that it will be possible to build a musical organization that will be a credit to the city.

Small Calendar Faces District Jury Monday

Two cases were continued to next term of general court this week, namely a civil case, Ross Cronkhite vs. W. J. Durban, due to the illness of Mr. Durban and the only new criminal case, that of state vs. John A. Ristau, a paternity proceeding. Three cases are scheduled for jury trial next week, but may be decided in the meantime thus making it unnecessary to call the jury for this term. These cases are, city of Thief River Falls vs. Chas. Fiterman et al, a condemnation proceeding; Hanson Motor Company vs. D. R. Anderson and Arthur Simonson vs. H. O. Tommerdahl.

Junior Hockey League In Close Competition

By defeating the league leading Rexalls Tuesday night, Al's Coffee Shops narrowed the Rexall's lead in the intermediate hockey league to two points. Parbst, Rolland and Tungseth for the Coffee Shops displaying some brilliant combination work to outscore the Rexalls 6-3.

The Bridgeman team is still trailing in the league standings but may prove a dangerous contender as all of their defeats have been by low scores.

In order to complete the schedule, games will be played each night during the next week and the final game for the championship will probably be played on Sunday night, March 9th.

Farmers Union Local Cancels March Meeting

The regular March meeting of the Simpson Local number one, Pennington county farmers union, scheduled to be held on Wednesday evening, March 4th, has been cancelled, Otto Rehm, president, stated this week. "So many of our members are snowed in that it is almost impossible for them to get out in the evening," Mr. Rehm said, "and for that reason it was thought best to cancel the meeting."

Arrangements are being made to secure some speakers and provide a program of entertainment for the April meeting which will be held on Wednesday, April first, Mr. Rehm said.

DOG TEAM COMES INTO OWN WITH SNOW DRIFTS

Atwater.—It's a far cry from the modern motor car of today to the dog team of yore, but weather and snow of the past weeks has proved that the dog team isn't ready to be classed as obsolete yet. Boyd Johnson drove a team of two fine dogs less than a year old into Atwater last week a distance of over [illegible]

Seeks Governor's Chair

Lieut. Gov. Hj. Petersen

Lieutenant Governor Hjalmer Petersen of Askov announced last week that he is a candidate for the farmer-labor endorsement for governor by the state convention which convenes in March.

Petersen's announcement, which followed Senator Benson's by one day states that: if he is elected "the half dozen Mexican generals" in the party will have to "go to work and spend far less time on their selfish political patronage, conniving and fixing." The party, Petersen said, "is sorely in need of discipline and that I shall provide."

Asserting that he has entered the race because he believes that as governor he can render a greater service to the party and to the state of Minnesota, Lieutenant Governor Petersen stated, "It may be a 'great honor and privilege' to be the party's candidate for governor, but having been elected to legislative positions several times and having passed thru the apprenticeship of being addressed 'honorable', that holds little, if any appeal."

"If elected governor, department heads under my administration will toe the mark and be held responsible for those under them. Inefficiency and lack of co-operation will not be tolerated."

HONORS DIVIDED IN HIGH SCHOOL DECLAM. CONTEST

East Grand Forks, Crookston, and Red Lake Falls Take District Laurels

Thief River Falls won one first place and Alvarado two in the sub-district declamation contest held in the Lincoln high school assembly room Friday evening, February 21. The Warren, Alvarado, Oslo, and Thief River Falls high schools were represented in each of the three divisions humorous, dramatic, and oratorical.

Winners in the three divisions were Marjorie Matheson of this city, in the humorous class; Arlys Anderson of Alvarado in the dramatic class; and Theodore Moleski of Alvarado in the oratorical class. Judges for the contest were Supt. P. W. Chase, Principle W. W. Richardson and Miss Myrtle McBroom of Warroad, Minnesota. While the judges reached their decisions musical selections were furnished by the Lincoln high school reed ensemble and the boys' double quartet.

The three winners in the sub-district contest competed in the district contest held at Warren on Tuesday evening, February 25, at which time East Grand Forks, Red Lake Falls and Crookston won first places in oratory, dramatic, and humorous, respectively.

Theodore Moleski of Alvarado, who represented this sub-district in the oratorical division, placed second.

MUCH ORGANIZING WORK BEING DONE

County Central Committee Holds Organization Meeting

The Pennington county farmer-labor convention will be held at the Pennington county court house on Saturday, March 7th, the county central committee announced this week. The meeting will be called to order at one p. m., and will hear the secretary's biennial report, elect five delegates to the state convention and transact such other business as may properly come before it.

All dues-paying members of the farmer-labor association in the county are entitled to seats in the convention and each township having no organized local club is entitled to two delegates elected and accredited by regularly called caucus. Calls for such caucuses have been issued by the county secretary. The brotherhood of locomotive firemen and engineers being an affiliated organization are entitled to representation by two delegates.

Considerable organization activity has been evident in the county during the past month, the following clubs having held their annual meeting or been newly organized: Star, Highlanding, North, Thief River Falls, St. Hilaire, River Falls and Norden. A club is in process of organization in Goodridge. Deer Park and Smiley clubs have not reported their annual meetings as yet, nor have their seats on the County Officials to Go to Pension Meet

Several county officials, including county auditor Arthur Senstad, county attorney H. O. Berve, chairman of the board Paul Roy, and commissioners Mandt and Lee will attend a meeting of county officials and state old age assistance division director Kenneth Haycraft and other state officials at the state office building in St. Paul on Saturday, February 29th, at which time the old age pension plan will be thoroughly discussed. Mr. Haycraft is at Washington this week getting complete information on the provisions of the federal act from national executives.

Mr. Senstad pointed out this week that pensioners should get their blanks, of which an additional supply has been received, filled out and filed with the county auditor at the earliest possible moment. After the applications have been filed the county board will consider them and set a date of hearing at which time the pension applicant must be present. Applicants will be notified of the date for hearing, Mr. Senstad stated.

The number of applications that will be received by this county is estimated to total somewhere between 300 and 400. 150 have already secured their blanks, Mr. Senstad stated.

Magic Act to Be Assembly Program

The sixth of the series of high school assembly programs scheduled for this school year will be held in the municipal auditorium Monday afternoon, March 2, at 3 o'clock. The entertainment will be an hour of sleight-of-hand performances by Ben Berger, magician. Mr. Berger's act, which has been an Orpheum circuit attraction, is considered one of the best of its kind.

Melander Returns From Bloomington

Winner of free trip to the annual meeting of State Farm insurance agents at Bloomington, Ill., O. R. Melander of Thief River Falls spent the fore part of the week at the headquarters of the Farm Bureau's insurance company, learning ways in which he may be of greater service to his many policyholders in this area. Meeting with much success during 1935 in selling and servicing automobile and life insurance protection of the Minnesota Farm Federation, Mr. Melander was one of a limited number of Minnesota agents who was awarded the trip to the annual meeting.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

2500 Attend Short Course at Warren

Approximately 2,500 attended the two-day thirteenth annual short course sponsored at Warren last week by the Farmers Federation of Clubs.

Blocked roads cut the attendance considerably, R. A. Rierson, general chairman said, but good crowds were on hand for all sessions.

Speakers in the men's department included John Brandt, president of the Land O'Lakes Creameries, T. M. McCall of the Northwest school at Crookston, Ray Bowden, secretary of the Northwest Country Elevator association and W. W. Brookings of the University of Minnesota extension department.

In the women's department Retta Bede of the Northwest school was a speaker and Mrs. J. H. Rosendahl presided. Music was supplied for various meetings by the Warren high school band under the direction of K. Killand and the Alvarado school band directed by O. K. Warcup.

Spurt Marks Spring Loans for Farming

Production Credit Associations of Minnesota in the first month of 1936 have made loans to one-third more farmer members than in the first month of 1935, according to figures from the production credit corporation, for this state.

Up to the end of January 680 farmers had obtained loans thru the 28 associations in Minnesota as against 457 a year ago, a gain of 223. The amount borrowed this year from their associations by the members is $406,000, which is $192,000 more than was borrowed in the first month of last year.

Much of the 1936 borrowing is in anticipation of 1936 crop production, though some of it is for the purpose of taking care of previous debts owed for farming expenses, and some for the purchase of livestock, materials and equipment.

Association officers are prepared for an increasing volume of business as the weather opens up to permit outside work, application blanks and other data being now available at the homes of local representatives in many rural communities in addition to the headquarters offices.

Newspapers Lead Field As Advertising Media

Fourteen reasons were pointed out this week to show why newspapers continued as "tops" as advertising media during 1935. Simultaneously with the announcement that newspaper advertising showed large gains during the last year, Thomas F. Barnhart, associate professor of journalism at the University of Minnesota, reported that a survey of media showed the following advantages of newspaper advertising.

1. Newspaper reading is a universal habit. Newspaper advertising, therefore, reaches virtually all who read and buy.
2. A newspaper advertisement can always be seen by the reader.
3. The newspaper advertisement, as part of the complete paper, goes into the home as a welcome guest.
4. The newspaper advertisement can have as much news value and reader interest as the news item.
5. The amount of text used in newspaper advertisements is dependent only upon the size of the space.
6. Newspaper advertising is flexible.
7. Newspaper advertising is quickly controlled.
8. Newspaper advertising may be adjusted to different conditions.
9. Newspaper advertising enables manufacturers and dealers to state where their products may be bought.
10. Newspaper advertising is inexpensive. Merchants have learned that it covers more families for less money than any other form of advertising.
11. Newspaper advertising results may be checked.
12. Newspaper circulation is known and is comparatively unaffected by daily change.
13. Nearly all of the newspaper's circulation is concentrated in its own market.
14. Newspaper advertising reduces selling costs because it entails no waste in circulation. This helps reduce costs for the consumer.

"Newspaper advertising", he concluded, "builds confidence and good will, attracts new customers, increases sales, and stabilizes merchandise, methods and prices.

Highway Expenditures Bring Wide Benefits

A highway expenditure of $100,000,000 initiates a movement that eventually involves, in the handling and processing of materials by industry, a total value of business transacted of approximately $315,000,000. This is the conclusion reached by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads after an extensive study of highway construction as an employment measure during depression.

A report on this study, recently published, shows that an annual highway expenditure of $100,000,000 results in an average annual employment on the highway work and in industry equivalent to 102,690 persons continuously employed for twelve months. Of these 37,960 are directly employed in highway work and 64,730 indirectly employed in industries furnishing materials, equipment, supplies and services.

"In addition to affording economic and unemployment relief", the Bureau states, "highway construction eventually provides a connected highway system which is a distinct national asset, promoting agricultural and industrial expansion and fostering social values."

VIRGINIA DEDICATES NEW MUNICIPAL HOSPITAL

Virginia, Minn.—This Range iron mining town of 16,000 people dedicated a $250,000 municipal hospital on Feb. 1, adding hospitalization to the many services now owned and run by the community in the interest of service, not profit. Virginia already operates its own utilities, having one of the lowest electric rates in the nation and heats the homes of its citizens with a municipal central heating plant.

The hospital has 50 beds and is completely equipped in every detail. To raise the money for the building, the citizens voted to bond the city up to $200,000. In addition the federal government gave $69,354.

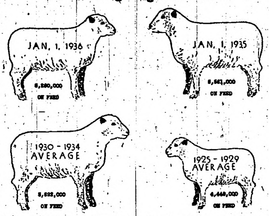
A special election will be held to choose a board to run the hospital.

Forestry Divison Exams Announced

An examination for towermen, smoke chasers, and patrolmen for the division of forestry will be given March 2, 1936, according to Grover M. Conzet, director. The examinations will take place in room 338 State Office Building, St. Paul, and at all of the District Rangers' headquarters.

Men taking the examination must be between 21 and 50 years of age. Not more than 15 men may be employed throughout the state. Such employment will be of a temporary nature.

Lamb Feeding Stages Comeback



A favorable outlook for the sheep and lamb markets is indicated statistically in view of the fact that there is a decrease of nearly 5½ per cent in the number of lambs on feed compared with a year ago, and a falling off of 8 per cent from the five-year average for the years 1933-34, says the Livestock Market Digest, issued by the Central Co-Operative Association, farmer-owned livestock selling agency at So. St. Paul.

On January 1, this year, 5,260,000 sheep and lambs were on feed compared with 5,561,000 a year ago. The average number on feed for the 1930-34 period was 5,561,000 a year ago. The average number on feed for the 1930-34 period was 5,692,000 head, and the average for 1925-29 was 4,448,000 head.

In spite of the reduction in number of lambs and sheep on feed over last few years, there is substantial increase in lamb feeding compared with the pre-depression years. Sheep and lambs have been a good investment during the past year and because of this, breeding ewes have been more popular with farmers than previously. Many Minnesota farmers came to South St. Paul last fall expecting to take feeder lambs home with them, but because of their scarcity, and high prices, they bought ewes instead. This substantiates the Government report that sheep make up a larger than usual proportion of the total sheep and lambs on feed January 1, 1936.

This fact indicates that there is a tendency to increase lamb production throughout the country. Too large an increase for the future market may not permit the lamb market to continue on as profitable as a basis as at present.

The number of lambs on feed now is 30 per cent greater than ten years ago and 18 per cent greater than the average pre-depression period for 1925-29.

While the general depression was a tremendous influence in cutting prices during the past five years, the increase in lamb feeding during that period also had tended to reduce prices. The average farm price of lambs in the United States during the period 1930-34 was $5.50 per cwt., contrasted to an average farm price of $11.62 per cwt, for the period 1925-29.

TAXLESS IOWA TOWN PAYS ITS WAY WITH MUNICIPAL UTILITIES

Hawarden, Ia.—For the fifth consecutive year this town will levy no local taxes this year, according to a report to State Comptroller C. B. Murtagh.

Proposed expenditures of $63,000 will be met largely from the revenues of municipally-owned utilities, the town officials report.

The last tax levied for town purposes was in 1930, when $6,000, or about one-tenth of that year's expenditures, was raised by taxation.

Hunters Urged to File Game Reports

Hunters are again urged to send their 1935 game license reports to the division of game and fish, as soon as possible. The license cards are already addressed to the game and fish division. All that is necessary is to make out the report of game taken and stamp and mail the cards.

"In 1925, the first year the reports were made mandatory, there were 131,590 small game licenses issued and the percentage reporting was 56.2." A. C. Hanson, director of the division, pointed out.

"In 1933 there were 215,729 licenses issued, with a percentage of only 23.2 reporting. It has been noted that the percentage has consistently decreased each year, with but one exception. It is important that we obtain as many reports as possible as there is no better way to learn of actual game conditions."

MELBY SUGGESTS TAX REFORMS

Addressing the farmer-labor club last Friday evening, Representative J. O. Melby called attention to the very evident need of tax reforms. He suggested that certain features of the Scandinavian taxation system could be applied to our own with resultant benefit to the masses of the people.

The idea as Mr. Melby outlined would be to reverse the present method of taxing property and income. Whereas, at the present time a fixed percentage is levied against the net incomes, while real estate and personal property is subjected to violent fluctuations in taxation depending upon the need of the government for financial support. Mr. Melby suggested that the tax upon property should be a fixed small mill rate in the nature of an occupational tax and the major part of the taxation should be levied upon net income. Mr. Melby would set the exemptions very low in order that almost everyone who is not a public charge would be required to pay some tax. Paying taxes, Mr. Melby believes, would tend to make people more "government conscious."

As we understand Mr. Melby's suggestion, net incomes would under this plan, have to be reported much as at present, but the rate of levy would not be fixed until the fiscal needs of the government and and its subdivisions have been ascertained and budgeted. The rate would then be fixed on a sliding basis with percentage of levy steeply increased as the net income approaches swollen proportions. Mr. Melby also condemned tax exempt securities, advocating that they be abolished.

We are not familiar enough with Mr. Melby's plan for tax changes to voice an opinion as to its merit, but it seems quite generally agreed that a reform must be brought about. Mr. Melby's plan seems feasible and we would welcome more discussion of it. What do our readers think about it? Let us have more light on the subject.

LEARNING TO WORK TOGETHER

During the past several weeks we have attended so many co-operative creamery meetings that we have quite lost count. One significant fact has been impressed upon us, however, and that is that they have all fared exceptionally well during the past year.

That this can be true during periods when the average individual and the average small business enterprise has been in more than usual difficulties in keeping their heads above water, seems to us to be an indication that people generally and farmers in particular are learning the art of working together for the common good.

Nor do we think that the occasional businessman who is inclined to look askance at the co-operatives need worry about his future. It is a well known fact that when the farmers and the farmers' institutions prosper the businessmen also prosper. So far as this community is concerned at least, business prosperity depends upon a prosperous farming population. It seems to us, that the business element could, with profit to themselves as well as for their own mental equanimity, dispel the bewhiskered boogey which certain reactionary interests hold up to them and label co-operatives. The co-operatives have built, and are still building prosperity in Northern Minnesota.

SPRING MUST BE HERE

The editor will vouch for it and the missus will will back us up. The crows are back. At least one crow is back for we saw one Sunday. Of course, few people will take an editor's word for anything, but, in this case we had the wife along and she saw it first and will corroborate our statement.

Now the only question in our mind is this: Has spring arrived? Or, has it been so cold down south that the crows decided Northern Minnesota couldn't be any worse?

SOME SENSIBLE ADVICE
(Farmers Union Herald)

It is not the function of the Herald to give advice to politicians and we do not presume to do so. We may, however, with propriety, quote someone who does give advice and in this connection here are some sound and sensible remarks by Lieutenant-Governor Hjalmer Petersen, given in connection with the Farmer-Labor party of Minnesota:

We must create a powerful party built on the rank and file of the people—a vast mass movement without self-seeking cliques or factions.

I do not approve of the political conniving and maneuvering that has been going on by a small inner circle, but that will be taken care of in due time. There is no use of giving that clique too much attention and leading them to believe that they are powerful. The state convention will be checked carefully to ascertain how many of the delegates are state-job holders. They are the servants of the people. They are not paid salaries by the state of Minnesota to engage in political manipulations.

Our party has criticized other political parties for the abuse of patronage. Perhaps we had better also be a little careful for it has been shown on more than one occasion that the members who hold no state jobs are free to vote their convictions for principles and for the good of the party, while the appointees vote pretty much enbloc as they are told. The meal ticket is persuasive. It reacts much like big advertising contracts, which we all know have much bearing on the editorial policy of many newspapers.

We submit that the above is sound advice, not only for the Farmer-Labor party of Minnesota, but for all political parties which make claim to rendering service to the common people.

If political parties would keep administration job holders out of their conventions as delegates, and off their central committees, the rank and file of voters would have more confidence in political parties.

What would you think of a cooperative set-up whose board of directors was composed of employees? Is it any less bad for the job holders of a political party to make up its central committees or to dominate conventions? You could not maintain confidence in a cooperative set-up maintained by employees, nor may you maintain popular confidence in a political movement dominated by political appointees. And if this is true of Minnesota, it is equally true when applied to North Dakota, Montana, Wisconsin or any other section of the country.

THE AMERICAN WAY
(New Republic)

With grim if unconscious irony eastern newspapers, organs of the forces of financial and industrial reaction, hail the Supreme Court decision killing the AAA as an historic step back to "the American way."

Back to the days of sixteen million unemployed! Back to Mellonism, to the days of favors for entrenched wealth, to foreclosed farms, to a federal government which sits smugly aloof and proclaims: "We cannot help you. The founding fathers made no provision for a situation like this."

The march of reaction must be stemmed—the liberty to go forward preserved. The millionaire contributors to the Liberty League must not be allowed the final interpretation of "the American way". Against the united forces of reaction only one thing can keep the road open for the fulfillment of the promise of American life: a union of liberals, progressives and radicals.

BEST IMMEDIATE REMEDY
(Minneapolis Labor Review)

There are ideas like the Townsend plan and the Social Justice plan of Father Coughlin's that have swept the nation. Both have their good points.

It seems to us, however, that the thirty hour week program without reduction in weekly income, proposed by the American Federation of Labor, is the thing that would come nearest to making old man Depression take the count for the longest time.

There should be pensions for the aged, insurance for the unemployed, public medical care for those unable to pay for it. But the saddest spectacle in all these drab times is the hopeless outlook for youth, and yet the patient way in which most youths accept the situation.

There is hope, there is drama, there is relief in the 30 hour week program. It deserves to be pushed more spectacularly and more systematically than has yet been done.

Youth, and youth is mighty, can be more quickly interested in a 30 hour week drive than in anything else, we believe. And to those who say 30 hours is not short enough to put everyone to work, the answer is that, with that achieved, the victory would encourage and inspire the workers to push on to the establishment of whatever hours might be necessary to give everyone a decent hold on life.

YOUNG ASTOR QUITS WORK
(Union Advocate)

A trifle over a year ago young John Jacob Astor, III, won international publicity by announcing that he was going into the International Mercantile Marine corporation as a $25-a-week clerk. He was going to learn the business from the ground up in the approved American Magazine fashion. Oh, it was a great story and all the newspapers used it with profuse illustrations showing young Astor wearing tailormade overalls and smoking a jimmy pipe.

That was just a little over a year ago. Last month young Astor resigned to take a much-needed rest in Paris, the French Riviera and St. Moritz, Switzerland. Asked why he quit his $25-a-week job he yawned and declared "It took too much of my time." It is hardly necessary to state that Mr. Astor did not join a union while he was "learning the shipping business from the ground up."

In the first place Astor had no intentions of learning the shipping business. In the second place he does not have to learn any trade or business. In the third place he's lazy in the first place and he knows that there's about $5,000,000 in his personal account, not a penny of which was accumulated by the sweat of his father or his father's father.

But it will take at least ten years for the Babbitts and the service club speakers to forget that young John Astor, III, at one time worked as a shipping clerk at $25 per week in order "to learn the shipping business from the ground up." It's such a sweet little story.

AMERICAN LIBERTY LEAGUE
(Bovey Press)

The question, "who and what is this American Liberty League," is a question that is popping up quite regularly now and will increase as the activity of this league increases and they have just recently established state headquarters in St. Paul. The answer is that it is an "organization of the unscrupulous money changers, entrenched wealth and greed" which had control of our national government prior to the election of President Roosevelt. Here are some of the financial contributions to the league's funds: Du Pont, John Raskob, Al Smith; total donations to their fund during 1935 was almost a half million dollars. The title is a screen for the Dawes, Mellon, Insull, Morgan, etal, combine that is determined to wreck all progressive legislation that has been enacted for the benefit of the other 99 per cent of the citizens of the United States.

Dear Mr. Aalbu:

I was glad to be advised of the package of petitions sent to Congressman Buckler, requesting action on the Frazier-Lemke Bill. The petitions are in good hands, and let me further assure you that I am actively working for this legislation and my various statements made to the press will bear me out on this.

Very sincerely,
ELMER BENSON,
Senator.

Mr. R. M. Aalbu,
Forum Publishing Co., Inc.,
Thief River Falls, Minnesota.
Dear Mr. Aalbu:

I have your letter of February 4th in regard to the petitions forwarded to Congressman Buckler, favoring the Frazier-Lemke Farm Refinancing Bill.

In reply will say that this measure has my support. On several occasions I have voted for this bill both in the Committee and on the floor of the Senate. I am glad to have your views and assure you I shall continue to do everything I can to obtain the passage of adequate farm relief legislation.

With kindest regards, I am,
Very truly yours,
HENRIK SHIPSTEAD.

R. M. Aalbu, Editor,
Tri-County Forum,
Thief River Falls, Minnesota.
My dear friend:

I am certainly pleased to acknowledge your letter of February 4th, in which you mention the sending of a package of petitions requesting the passage of the Frazier-Lemke Farm Refinance Measure. I am also pleased to advise you that I did receive the package Thursday morning. In the afternoon, I took the floor, and spoke for about fifteen minutes on the Frazier-Lemke Bill, and the evident need for giving the farmers this assistance. In the course of my speech, I waved a large bundle of the petitions, from your territory, in the air, so that the Congressmen could see them.

I greatly appreciate the personal efforts and the work of your associates in getting this petition up and sent to me. I also appreciate the interest and the actvivity, as well as the position taken by so many of the farmers.

I am frank to advise you, however, that it seems impossible to jar the conservative and reactionary Congressmen, and to make them realize that there is a great need to pass some really liberal, progressive and fundamental legislation to help the farmers and other distressed groups in the nation. It looks as though there will have to be another election before there will be a possibility to pass in Congress, legislation such as the Frazier-Lemke Bill. As soon as we are able to get enough names on the petitions to bring up the Frazier-Lemke Bill in the house, the conservatory-reactionary leaders get busy and get a few members to take their names off the list. We are hoping, however, to surprise the opposition some of these days, and get enough additional signers at one time. As soon as 218 members are signed on the petition it automatically forces the bill up for consideration within a short time afterwards.

It is very encouraging to receive such a petition as you have sent to me. It shows that the farmers and others in the farming districts are beginning to wake up to the need of such legislation as the Frazier-Lemke Bill.

As you stated in your letter, it is true that I have been very active in working for the Frazier-Lemke Bill. I have been able to get a number of Congressmen to sign the petition to bring the bill up for consideration.

Appreciating your splendid cooperation and assuring you of my desire and pleasure to be of service at any time, I am, with best wishes and kindest regards,

Yours very sincerely,
R. T. BUCKLER,
Rep. in Congress

CAPITOL NEWS REVIEW

By A. I .Harris

The Governor was at the Capitol last week clearing his desk of a mass of accumulated business, preparatory to his departure for a month's stay in the southern sunshine to recover his health . . .

Cheered on by the report of his physician that his health is being restored and gaining in weight and strength rapidly so that he already is close to his normal self, Governor Olson is preparing to wage his campaign for the United States Senate with all his old-time zeal and fight, asking no quarter and giving no quarter, but conducting a clean and intelligent fight on real issues. His politiacl enemies who have been hoping for an Olson let-down are due for surprise and disappointment . . . .

During his convalescence, the Governor kept a close tab on both state and national events. He declared his dissatisfaction with the old age pension bill passed by the special legisatitvle session, believes its provisions inadequate and referring to it as "an old age relief bill rather than an old age pension bill." He called the special session in the hope that a real old age pension bill would be passed, and he was able to force only a semblance of such a bill through a reactionary Legislatre. This is certain to be an issue in the next state campaign, which the Governor will find time to aid despite his campaigning for a national office. . .

The Governor already has indicated some of the issues on which he will make his national fight. He will ask for curbing the power of the United States Supreme court in declaring unconstitutional social and economic measures passed by Congress. He will also bring his plan of production for use instead of for private profit to the people and fight for a neutrality program which will actually keep this country out of war and make it impossible for any individual to make personal profit of human butchery. "When nobody can make any profit out of war we will soon find was scares, which are generally artificially created, a thing of the past," he said. The Governor also is outlining a constructive program for youth.

This column has always maintained that the so-called Minnesota Law and Order League is a fraud, carrying out a political plan under cover of a lofty sounding name. Unquestionably many who belong to the league are motivated by honorable intentions, but there seems to be little doubt that its real purpose is to discredit liberal movements.

Last week Al Hansen, chairman of the Hennepin County Farmer Labor association, demanded an investigation of the League. Among other things he charged that its intentions are political and not civic; that its origin springs from the labor-baiting Citizens Alliance, which has demonstrated that it is more interested in continuing strikes than in promoting industrial peace, and that it uses as figureheads a few unsuspected dupes to give it the appearance of genuineness. . . .

Demands of investigations of alleged subversive activities of certain groups generally springs from the same reactionary crowd that created the league, but it is time that the spotlight of investigation be turned on the activities of such organizations as the league.

Quietly, without fanfare of publicity, the Minnesota State Highway Department has conducted one of the most gigantic battles against nature in her most intractable mood in the last ten days. A record breaking snowfall, plus the coldest spell in the history of the state, plus a strong west wind, buried roads under drifts that in many places were more than 26 feet deep and so solidly packed that dynamite for the first time in the history of the state was necessary to dislodge them. Railroads were blocked, eter trains stalled, villages short of fuel. And all the time the thermometer flirted with 30 below. Yet highways were opened before railroads and in less than 12 hours in most cases they were in better driving condition than city streets. . . .

Southern Minnesota seemed hardest hit. Previous heavy snowfalls had lined roads with drifts, and ordinary V-type plows were useless, despite heavy trucks and pushers. The snow plow merely buried itself in a drift like a mole in his burrow. Rotary plows were necessary and perhaps the most welcome sight that many a town has seen this winter was the spout of snow cast 50 feet in the air and 200 feet to the side of a highway, as one of these marvelous machines cut a swath through the drift. . . .

There are places where a car seems to be driving thru a canyon of white; other places where the snow was so deep the rotary had to be moved thru twice, but there was no place where nature was even able to challenge man. Nature shot the works this winter, and came out second best. The saga of the fight of the highway men who clear our drifts will be long remembered. Certainly even a Republican could not accuse the Department for playing politics with Old Man Winter.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

There is a difference between the New Deal and Socialism.

The purpose of the New Deal has been to patch up our wrecked capitalism and put it back on the road; Socialism would do away with it.

The New Deal stands to harness the profit motive, to bit and curb it, and to make it haul the load of our economic processes; Socialism would unhitch this stampeding, ruthless creature and revamp the load of economic processes, with the service motive led by the policy of The Golden Rule.

The New Deal would prevent holding companies from throttling public utilities corporations; Socialism would take over the public utilities.

Cheering News From Spain

Winning 238 seats out of 470 in the Cortes, or congress, in the recent election, the Spanish People's Front has put its best foot forward and stayed the hand of fascism. This clean majority for the liberals and radicals made certain the freeing of 30,000 people who have been kept in prisons since the October, 1934 uprising. There is also hope for the carrying out of the campaign platform, which called for expropriation of the big land owners and turning the land over to the peasants who actually tilled it, increasing wages of agricultural and industrial workers, disbanding Gil Robles' fascist army, and encouraging the formation of workers' unions.

Spain it seems is determined to avoid the pitfall of fascism in its march to a better society. It has the examples of Germany and Italy fresh in mind—and see plainly that the only answer is a united front, which it has proved overwhelmingly in the last election.

Fascism, a dying society's almost impregnable wall against approaching socialism, is unnecessary and brutal. It is an admission and a denial—an admission that swinging a courty AS ONE UNIT is more effective than allowing it to slop all over as demagogues wish it to go, and a denial of the people to use that singleness of purpose for their own good.

Progress can only be toward more and more freedom. The working class can never even approach freedom until it puts a working-class government in power. United fronts are often useful for this purpose; therefore, we hail developments in Spain as an example of what can be done with a united front if the people only try. Fascism is not necessary, if it is combatted vigorously in time.

A Congressman's Geography

J. Hamilton Lewis, distinguished Illinois senator and big shot on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, recently took a squint at the map of Europe and Asia and delivered the opinion that "Japan having a great navy and Russia a great army . . . an alliance between these two will be made with the understanding that Russia shall furnish the army and Japan the navy, and those two in combination will assert and maintain the supremacy of the whole zone from Russia to the end of Siberia."

J. Hamilton is one of those inventive cusses who find that when a Red Scare or a Yellow Peril alone do not alarm people, a mixture of the two in the right proportions is liable to turn the trick. Aside from the fact that, as every schoolboy knows, Soviet Russia already has "supremacy of the whole zone from Russia to the end of Siberia", the alliance mentioned is diplomatically impossible—especially with a view toward a war against the United States, which Lewis hinted at. Relations between Japan and Russia have been strained greatly for a long time; and recent border disturbances have not lessened the strain in the least. The fact is, Japan, with greedy eyes on eastern Siberia, is playing with the cyclone; for present-day Russia's army is NOT the undisciplined organization which upheld the Czars. Moreover, it is probably the only army existing for the sole purpose of defense. The socialist state existing in Russia makes any hint of aggression ridiculous. It is preposterous to believe that Russia's armies would take chestnuts out of the fire for Japan.

To try to analyze the statements of supposedly educated people (as all senators are supposed to be) is dismal work. In this case, J. Hamilton Lewis stated brashly what he FEARED—not what his reason told him was so. When emotion supplants reason, we may as well render a verdict that he "doesn't know what it's all about."

War Is Costly

Mussolini's war has cost him, so far, a neat half a billion dollars, or over ten dollars for every man, woman and child in Italy. This is what the government had to levy on the people, and does not take into consideration the voluntary gifts, rallies, etc., which patriotic fascists brought about.

Mussolini has captured Makale, a small city of about 6,000 in the north of Ethiopia, and a few hundred square miles of wasteland, in several months of war.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelson

In the good, old days, there was one who used to burst forth in print at all sorts of odd times—Republican vice president Charles G. Dawes.

He hurried here and he hurried there on all manner of important missions. Republican editors shook their heads admiringly. "Yes Sir!" said they, "When there's a hard job to be done, they have to send Charley!"

Wherever he went, reporters hung about, hungrily for the pearls of wisdom which now and then fell from his lips.

When he passed through St. Paul in 1922 or thereabouts he delivered himself of a particularly glittering gem. It was at the time of the initial post-war panic in the agricultural Northwest. One of the group of awed admirers which had crowded into his special car asked him how the sorry situation of the farmer could best be met . . . .

Charley removed the upside-down pipe from his mouth . . . . "Tell the farmers to go home and slop the pigs," he advised cryptically.

The assembled St. Paul gentlemen of politics and press gazed at him with even greater awe than before. Startled realization came to them that he had put his finger right on the whole trouble. Of course that was it! . . . The farmer hadn't paid attention to business! . . . He had been lazy! . . . He had loafed! He had gone to town too much! He had been riding around in his car!

That evening the reactionary Republican press of St. Paul carried lengthy editorials, quoting the great man's remark and marveling at his keeness of vision which had enabled him thus to see to the heart of the difficulty.

* * * *

Many years later, something else occurred which proved conclusively that Charley was, indeed, the brilliant lad he was reputed to be.

Under Mr. Hoover, he was appointed chairman of that great governmental lending agency, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Here, at last, was an opportunity for a clever fellow to show in a big way, what he could do when he really put his heart into his work.

Nothing much was said about it when it happened—in fact, nothing at all was said about it—but it became known later one institution to borrow heavily from the RFC was Dawes' own bank, the rather shaky Central Republic Bank & Trust Co., of Chicago. There was involved, the modest sum of 90 million dollars or thereabouts.

But as unfortunately happens to banks now and then, this particular bank blew up with a loud and startling bang. It was an embarassing incident, particularly for the Government; for the 90 million dollar loan became then a trifle less than gilt edge.

The government, luckily, had some collateral, however, and this it proceeded to liquidate. From this source it was able to reduce the debt to 60 million.

Now the stockholders are being sued on their liability. The most that can be thus collected will be 14 million dollars. After the smoke finally clears fully away, the Government stands to lose, net, about 50 millions on the transaction.

But what about Charley? He was a big stockholder, of course, and will have to shell out handsomely!

A reasonable presumption, perhaps, but the facts are quite otherwise. Not thus easily is Charley caught out on a limb! He has already settled. And the most they were able to hold him for was $5,200.

Proving, again, that he is quite as clever as he is reputed to be.

Incidentally, the Republican press, which had been wont to laud him to the skies, suddenly withdrew into blank and embarassed silence concerning its erstwhile favorite.

And the frequent mention of Charles G. Dawes as a presidential possibility as suddenly ceased.

This was, of course, something to be thankful for . . . though it does seem that 60 millions, net, for this blessing may be just a wee bit high.

Though, on second thought, maybe it was worth it at that!

Hearst's Compliments Not Wanted

An Editorial in The Catholic Worker

In RE your recent congratulations to the Catholic press, and your editorial compliments to Catholics on their militant fight against Communists, may we inform you that Catholics do not fight Communists, but communism. Catholics do not fight communism because they wish to support a vicious capitalism or because communism objects to the jingoistic nationalism with which you fill your sorry sheets. Catholics do not subscribe to the class war which you are doing your best to advance. Nor do Catholics support the anti-peace movement you foster. In other words, Catholics are not working alongside you, so your compliments are lost. All these things are just as un-Catholic as is communism itself. Which makes your papers and other media of propaganda un-Catholic, too.

The Catholic fight on communism is one based on philosophies, not on economics. And by the same token your brand of Americanism, your bourgeois capitalism, your class war, your militaristic attitude come in for the same condemnation as does the philosophy of Marx and Engels.

The difference is that the followers of Marx are honest enough to hold to a doctrine which they believe is right. You, like all Fascists, are a perfect pragmatist. Utility takes the place of morality for you. And unlike some pragmatists, the utility is not for the common good. It is utility for Hearst.

Please, Mr. Hearst, Catholics have a tough enough time trying to be understood. Do not complicate the issues more. Stay on your own side of the fence; do your own dirty work; work up the passions of one mob against the other; do your best to stir up world conflagrations; rant and rave about "my country, right or wrong;" support the exploitation of labor; support everything that is evil in the world today, as you do; but please, please, do not try to convince the world that Catholics have any share in your sordid adventures.

VANISHED

The peace and calm of the police station were disturbed by the entrance of a very excited woman. Hurriedly she approached the inspector.

"I've lost my husband. He was with me yesterday, but I've not seen him since."

"Extraordinary," replied the inspector. "Can you give me any particulars as to his appearance?"

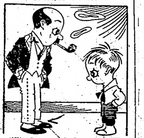
"Oh, yes! He's very dark, and has a sallow complexion. He also has a Roman nose."

The inspector looked grave and shook his head as he replied: "In that case, madam, you'll never see him again."

"Why?"

"Because a Roman nose never turns up."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

CRACKS DOWN



"What's a satirical touch, pa?"

"It's the fellow who borrows money of you and then kids you about it whenever you meet."

Would Get the Point

While hanging notices on the bulletin board, Jim had accidentally dropped a tack and neglected to pick it up. Teacher spotted it.

"See here," she said. "Why didn't you pick this up? What would happen if I stepped on it while talking to the class?"

The Eggs-Planation

Cooking Teacher—Why, Gladys, what happened to these eggs? How long did you boil them?

Gladys—Half an hour.

Cooking Teacher—Half an hour? Didn't I tell you never to boil eggs over three minutes?

Gladys—Sure, teacher, but there were ten of them!

Endless Study

"Did any politician ever try to tell you you didn't know your own business?"

"Yes," said Mr. Dustin Stax. "But I manage to keep the old firm going and a politician is liable to go out of business every four years."

Honored

Son of College Professor—My father holds the seat of applied physics at Yale.

Son of an ex-Convict—Tut, tut, your father has nothing on mine. He held the seat of applied electricity at Sing Sing.

Monetary Systems

"Socially," said Miss Cayenne, "I can't approve of the idea. I have the highest regard for the usefulness of an oyster shucker. But I can't esteem him as an original custodian of wealth."

SOME REASON

She—Humff. You expect me to marry a grouch like you? Never!

He—I'm only grouchy because you refuse me.

Dependence on the Next Generation

"You have kept the twins awake all night!" exclaimed Mr. Meekton's wife.

"Yes, Henrietta. We need money."

"What has that to do with depriving our little ones of rest?"

"I tried to keep them in conversation, hoping that one of them would say something that we could sell for five dollars to a sayings of bright children department."

Going Fast

Dentist's Daughter—Have you asked papa for my hand?

Candidate—No. But I've tried four times. Every time I step into his office I lose my courage. Today I allowed him to pull my fourth tooth as an excuse.

Getting Prepared

English Sportsman—Very well, my man. Fetch me my shooting togs, my hunting cap, my game bag and my elephant gun.

Poor Excuse

"How dare you offer me a cheap necklace like this! It's imitation!"

"My dear—the sincerest form of flattery."—Stray Stories Magazine.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the airways emergency station. In it are Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to the platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows her contempt for Garth.

CHAPTER II.—Through Garth's guidance the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to take a chance in investing a small amount. Sensing the treachery that lies ahead, Garth secretly removes a small part from the motor of the plane.

CHAPTER III.—Huxby and Lilith taunt Garth with his "gullibility," but their tone soon changes when they try to start the crippled plane. Returning to shore they try to force Garth to give up the missing part. Garth manages to set the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls, where it is wrecked. He points out to the enraged trio that he is their only hope in guiding them out of the wilderness, and to kill him would be fatal to all.

CHAPTER IV.—Garth begins the work of preparing for the long journey. He insists that the others help. Moccasins must be made, and Ramill and his daughter hardened for the hardships ahead in their toilsome trek to the outpost on the Mackenzie.

CHAPTER V.—Returning from a long sleep in the woods, Garth finds the party has stolen the tea and sugar he has been saving for emergencies. He makes no objection, simply pointing out that he is accustomed to a strict meat diet, and that they are hurting only themselves. The work of getting ready for the trip continues. Huxby refuses to help, and works on the mining claim.

"To be sure. That above all else," he agreed. "So how could I deprive you of that pleasure or fail to give your father and your fiance another chance to bilk me out of my placer claim? I agreed to get you back to the Mackenzie. When we reach the old post, we part company. You and Huxby will then be free to go as far as you can."

"But in that case— No, you can't make me swallow it. I know you're not such a fool as to risk losing that placer," said Ramill.

Garth laughed outright.

"What d'you take me for? Your brand of gold-digger? Gad, that's the nubbin of it all. It's the reason why men like you and Huxby lose out. You worship the golden calf. Yet what value is there to riches other than what you get from them? Can you think of a more enjoyable game than playing draw poker, with our lives in the jackpot, and Fortune dealing us the cards of chance?"

"What's the catch?" inquired Miss Ramill, with a sudden upwelling of her sophisticated cynicism. "'Lives in the jackpot,'—that means nothing. It's your placer that's in the pot. What stakes do you consider we have in to balance it?"

"That would be telling," he teased. "You'll know if I win. If I lose, it will not matter to any of you what you've risked. The showdown may come sooner than I expected. Your father is already in fairly good shape. We'll start the trip out as soon as those caribou skins have been tanned."

CHAPTER VI

Hell in the Muskeg.

GARTH sat beside the camp fire, sewing new moccasins for himself. Nearby, the millionaire dealer in mines and his fastidious daughter scraped the raw sides of the six caribou skins and rubbed them with the tanning mixture of fat, liver and brains. Garth had told them they could either tan the skins, or wait for him to do it. Until the tanning had been finished, the trip out would not begin.

Mr. Ramill was so keen to start back for civilization that he went at the disagreeable task with energy and determination. Lilith not only worked as vigorously as her father, she showed a real interest in the tanning.

Huxby took no part in this preparation of the skins. When he came down to the camp from the platinum placer, the sight of his fiancee's doing such squaw work struck him speechless. He stared in blank amazement. When at last he found his voice, he started to threaten Garth:

"You've gone a bit too far, you roughneck. Stand up, or I'll kick you up. I am going to—"

The girl broke in, with cool scorn: "Tune off, old dear. You're set on static. It's not interference we want. Dad and I are giving this performance under our own direction. You see, it's a bargain. Alan agrees to start our trip out just as soon as these skins are all tanned."

The mining engineer drew back. "So soon as that. My dear girl, if he's going to rush us off, I don't see how I can spare any time here in camp. I haven't yet sampled all the area of the placer."

"You'll have two more days for it," Garth told him. "Only don't forget that an alloy of platinum and gold weighs more than lead. You'll be toting my 60 per cent, along with the 40 for yourself and Mr. Ramill. If you hide the loot in your pockets, you'll go down like a shot, first time you slip into a muskeg pool or quagmire. Think of the all-around calamity that would mean. You lose your life, Mr. Ramill would lose his Man Friday, Miss Lilith her fiance, and I—I'd lose my 60 per cent."

Mr. Ramill interposed: "It's no joke, Vivian. I've seen a strong swimmer sunk by the gold in his money-belt. A bag can be thrown off the shoulders. Another thing, Garth is to receive his three-fifths of whatever you have panned out. That is understood."

"It was his bargain," Huxby replied.

He went to gorge on the leg of caribou that Garth had roasted over the fire on a twist-thong of rawhide. When he could eat no more, he hastened back to the placer trough to resume his panning.

Before sundown, Garth set several rawhide snares, each attached to a pair of downbent saplings. For bait, he used raw pieces of caribou flesh. The beasts of the valley had never been trapped. When at sunrise, he went the rounds of his snares, he collected a lynx, two red foxes, a wolverine, and a wolf.

Garth did not reset the snares. He had more skins than he needed. From the wolf-hide he made a knapsack for Huxby. The fox skins furnished smaller bags for Mr. Ramill and Lilith.

At the second sunrise, Garth bundled the lynx and wolverine pelts and a quantity of catgut with the caribou skins.

Huxby eyed the bundle ironically. "Mr. Ramill told me about your caribou parka talk. I take it, you aim to go back and live among the Eskimos."

"I might do worse," Garth replied. "Here's your wolf packbag. Load our metal, and slant up from the placer. We'll meet you at the glacier."

Lilith Ramill crept into the leanto for the last time. She came out with the pouches of salt and tea. Neither had been opened since Garth put them in her care.

Her worn boots lay at the foot of the leanto. Garth added them to his pack. "We might sew on rawhide soles," he said. "All set. How about you, mates? Ready to hit the trail?"

The girl showed the whisky flask that he had left in her father's care. It was full of fly dope—spruce pitch mixed with caribou tallow. She put the flask into her foxskin bag, along with the pouches of tea and salt.

Mr. Ramill was already walking off. Garth had made a tump-line for his pack. As he fitted the band across his forehead and stood up, rifle in hand, he glanced over his shoulder at the girl.

She turned and met his glance. Her lips curled in their old scornful smile. "What are you waiting for? Aren't we ever to get out of this beastly valley?"

He started off without any reply but with a glow of exultance under his outward show of indifference. Lilith Ramill thought she was about to escape from the Wild.

He had promised to guide them all to the Mackenzie. The probabilities were now in favor of even her father making it. The girl would go back to what she called civilization—to luxury and self-indulgence, to jazz and nightclubs—the vapid pursuit of sensation.

Yet a part of her would linger behind in this lost valley of the desolate subarctic Rockies. She had eaten of wild meat; she had smelled the tang of smoke from man's first friend, the camp fire. She had come face to face with the Primitive—and had lived it.

Fortunately, she had already been hard. Now she was t Under the smear of mosquito dope, the lines had smoothed from her face. The drawn look had disappeared. Instead of the scarlet of rouge, her lips were cherry red with healthy natural color. She had gained weight. Her body now looked lean rather than emaciated.

As Garth overtook the girl's father, he eyed him with a smaller yet no less genuine satisfaction. For every pound gained by the daughter, the father had been rid of three or more.

Garth himself swung briskly ahead. So far, nothing had been said to Huxby about the cache cave in the ice tunnel of the glacier stream. He knew only that the caribou carcasses had been put on ice.

The one thing of which Garth felt most certain regarding the engineer was that he would never give over trying to get the platinum placer until every possible scheme had been balked. Mr. Ramill might quit. He already possessed a fortune.

But Huxby was still a relatively poor man, and he had now made certain that the placer was worth at least a million dollars. Behind his polished front, he was no less unscrupulous than his millionaire partner, and he was absolutely coldblooded.

Among the cards that the future was to deal in the game, the ice cave might prove to be anything from a two-spot to an ace. If the play should shift back to the valley, a cache full of meat would most benefit the player who knew about it.

Lilith made the last climb to Garth without effort. But Huxby plodded up almost as winded as Mr. Ramill. He lowered from his shoulders the small but heavy load in his wolfskin knapsack. The chunks of frozen caribou meat beside the bulky blanket-wrapped bundle on Garth's packboard drew his displeased attention.

"You can't expect me to carry any of that venison. I'm no pack jack of the woods. Forty pounds is quite enough to suit me."

Garth hefted the wolfskin sack.

"My guess is forty-five. Figuring roughly, that makes forty-one troy pounds, or four, ninety-two troy ounces. Call it five hundred even. Platinum is around sixty dollars an ounce troy. The values of the alloy will average at least thirty. That gives us a total of say, fifteen thousand dollars. Not so bad for a few days' panning."

Huxby's face showed that this was no news to him. For all his cool self-control, his fingers clutched tight hold of the wolfskin as he drew it out of Garth's careless grasp.

Though Garth smiled at the engineer's betrayal of cupidity, he took note of it as an additional warning.

Garth's sideward glance caught an amused twinkle in Mr. Ramill's shrewd eyes. The hard training had put the millionaire in better health than he probably had enjoyed for many years. Also, his mind was bigger and better poised than that of his prospective son-in-law. He could smile with Garth over Huxby's obsession—smile and put aside all thought of the placer until in a position to take it from its discoverer.

Lilith saw the situation from a still different angle. She opened the wolfskin sack to peer inside. At sight of the nodules, she dropped the flap, with a look of disgust.

"Worth only fifteen thousand dollars," she bantered her fiance. "You've dug dirt all this time for a trifle like that, and lugged it all the way up here. Don't tell me you're so dumb that you plan to pack it for the weeks Alan says we'll need to get back to the Mackenzie!"

"With my blanket and the meat that's in it, I'm starting off with something like two hundred pounds," Garth said. "Game was scarce on the other side of the pass when I went out the other time. The weight of our metal in meat may be worth more than the fifteen thousand dollars. Let Huxby choose which he prefers to pack."

The engineer compromised by shoving one of the twenty-pound chunks of caribou meat in the sack, on top of the metal.

Garth backed up to his boulder-perched pack, slipped the tump-line over his forehead, and started up the great cleft as if his 200-pound pack weighed no more than Huxby's 65 pounds of meat and metal.

He halted only when the other men were compelled to stop for breath. Huxby, though carrying a load only a third the weight of Garth's, had soon begun to strain and puff as hard as Mr. Ramill.

In places the pitch of the glacier became too steep for ordinary climbing. Garth had to draw his belt-ax and chop foot holds. The last of these steep rises was far up towards the head of the pass.

The remaining distance to the summit was not so steep, and there were no dangerous crevasses. Garth made the climb at a swinging pace. He was halfway down before he met Huxby plodding again upwards with Mr. Ramill. The engineer looked at him with cold-eyed rancor.

Mr. Ramill panted a wistful question: "Wh-when—do we—eat?"

"At the top. Take your time."

Lilith had chosen to wait for Garth down where he had left them all. His pack lay on the snow below the boulder upon which he had set it. She pointed her slender finger at the fallen bundle.

"I tried to find out if you were lying about the weight. I couldn't even lift one end. But you see how the top of the stone slopes. The beastly thing slid off."

"That's all right, Miss Ramill. Easy enough to up-end it again."

"Easy!" Her blue eyes glowed with an odd light. "You carried Dad back to camp that day. But it was down-hill. Now—to pack this frightful load all the way up here! Alan Garth, you're a man!"

"Well, it's a bit of a stiff pull-up," he admitted. "But we'll soon make the downslope. I left the knife on the knapsack. Go up and slice that caribou meat."

The girl whom her own father could not command met the order with a cheerful nod. She started briskly off up the gap. Garth's steady climbing brought him to the top of the pass a few paces behind Huxby and Mr. Ramill. Lilith was sprinkling salt on slices of the raw meat.

The pass was barren even of caribou moss. The meat had to be eaten cold or uncooked; or not at all. Six hours had passed since the party left the camp in the valley bottom. After the long, hard climb, even the girl was hungry enough to have eaten rawhide.

Less than half of the 20-pound chunk of caribou remained by the time even Mr. Ramill found he could eat no more.

All were so refreshed by the food and rest that no one objected when Garth gave the word to start on. There would be no more slogging up-hill, with lungs bellowsing for air. One would only have to hold back.

But that was the rub—the holding back. The south side of the pass was far steeper than the north, and there was no glacier to offer stretches of smooth footing. The bed of the sharply tilted cleft frequently dropped over small cliffs. Between these high ledges were slides of frost-shattered rocks. Patches of ice here and there made the footing doubly treacherous.

WOODPECKERS FREEZE TO SIDES OF TREES

Red Wing—Tragedies in bird life have been the common thing this winter with record-breaking cold weather. From Wacouta comes a report that numerous woodpeckers have been found clinging to the sides of trees, frozen to death. They died while attempting to pick from frozen trunks the worms which provide for their sustenance. It has been impossible for birds to find food and to keep warm during the recent cold spell. Hundreds of people are clearing a space in their back yards of a few feet in diameter and placing scraps of food in the clearing where the birds are able to get them easily. Those who have done so are finding it a good deal of fun to watch the birds and realize that they are doing their part to make life a little more enjoyable.

Snowbound

..but Telephone Roads

During the blizzards and subzero weather of recent weeks, families everywhere have depended upon the telephone more than ever before. Travel was difficult—for many it was impossible. But the telephone kept snowbound families in touch with relatives, friends, doctors and places of business.

Nearly everyone increased their use of the telephone. The daily number of calls went up... 40... 50... 60 per cent... in some cases tripled. All-time records were broken in both local and long distance calls. With this tremendous increase in use of the telephone, service was sometimes slower than usual. But practically all telephone "roads" were kept open.

The telephone helped highway workers, railroad men, police, firemen, doctors and others to carry on. In countless ways it was an invaluable messenger in time of need.

How the Telephone Helped

The stork "walked telephone wires" into several homes. Doctors, unable to reach these homes, gave directions by telephone.

• • •

In many cases of illness and accident, it was impossible for doctors to reach patients. Treatment was prescribed by telephone.

• • •

Travelers in blocked trains and automobiles sought shelter in nearby homes... telephone calls flashed home news of their safety... enabled them to cancel appointments... make new plans.

• • •

Schools were dismissed in many places because of blizzard conditions. Parents were notified by telephone so that they might come for children.

• • •

Homes and communities threatened with fuel and food shortages sent word by telephone so that snowplows and highway crews could open the roads and bring supplies and medical aid.

• • •

Hundreds of persons suffered from exposure. But millions of trips were made over telephone wires by persons warm and comfortable within their homes.

The debate on the United States constitution which was scheduled between J. F. Landy of Minneapolis and R. M. Aalbu of this city was called off due to the unavoidable absence of Mr. Landy. The entertainment committee plans on staging the debate at a later date.

The club went on record recommending to the county convention that it shall propose to the state convention a change in the association's constitution providing that memberships shall be for the calendar year beginning January 1st and expiring on December 31st instead of as present with each membership expiring one year from the date of joining the association. The change would make it easier for the secretaries as well as for the members to know their standing.

In reply to a questionaire sent from national headquarters of the American Commonwealth federation, the club went on record favoring a national third party in the 1936 campaign with a production for use program and a full slate of candidates for president, vice president and congressional offices. The club also went on record favoring a national third party convention in May and representation by congresional districts. A poll of the club to determine its fovorites for president and vice president disclosed Senator Nye and Mayor LaGuardia as the leaders with the LaFollettes, Gov. Earle of Pennsylvania, Congressman Thos. R. Amlie and Congressman Lundeen bunched close behind them.

The executive committee of the club in meeting on Tuesday evening sent a resolution to the highway department, requesting that a construction project be launched this year on trunk highway number one from the city and fifteen miles east. It was pointed out that this stretch of road is in bad condition and hard to maintain, as well as the fact that this is one of the most important roads leading into the city.

The desirability of seeding more of our land to forage crops was also discussed. Alfalfa should be given more consideration, says Mr. Brookins, as it is still the cheapest source of high quality nutrients available.

GOODRIDGE CRY. REPORTS A FINE 1935 BUSINESS

Sidelines Net the Organization A Good Profit During Past Year

A fine report of the year's business was rendered to the stockholders of the Goodridge co-operative creamery at their annual meeting at the high school in Goodridge on Saturday afternoon. The financial statement showed an institution of better than average standing and the statistical report indicates that the creamery has been competently and efficiently handled.

A total of 143,418.34 pounds of butterfat has been received from which 177,592 pounds of butter was made. Of this amount, 35,856 pounds shipped were Land O'Lakes grade. The average price received for butter made was 25.56 cents and average price paid patrons for butterfat was 27.93 cents per pound. Manufacturing and general expense cost per pound of butter was 2.96 cents.

The creamery enjoyed a brisk business in produce and oil purchases and sales, the net income from sources other than dairy products being $1206.35.

The meeting which was well attended was entertained with a program of speakers and musical numbers. A humorous recitation by Agnes Johnson "The Last Days of School" and vocal duets by Floyd Olson and Ernest Swanson enlivening the proceedings. Talks were given by Land O'Lakes field man John Lager, W. E. Dahlquist, Lloyd Nelson, operator and R. M. Aalbu.

The debate on the United States constitution which was scheduled between J. F. Landy of Minneapolis and R. M. Aalbu of this city was called off due to the unavoidable absence of Mr. Landy. The entertainment committee plans on staging the debate at a later date.

The club went on record recommending to the county convention that it shall propose to the state convention a change in the association's constitution providing that memberships shall be for the calendar year beginning January 1st and expiring on December 31st instead of as present with each membership expiring one year from the date of joining the association. The change would make it easier for the secretaries as well as for the members to know their standing.

In reply to a questionaire sent from national headquarters of the American Commonwealth federation, the club went on record favoring a national third party in the 1936 campaign with a production for use program and a full slate of candidates for president, vice president and congressional offices. The club also went on record favoring a national third party convention in May and representation by congresional districts. A poll of the club to determine its fovorites for president and vice president disclosed Senator Nye and Mayor LaGuardia as the leaders with the LaFollettes, Gov. Earle of Pennsylvania, Congressman Thos. R. Amlie and Congressman Lundeen bunched close behind them.

The executive committee of the club in meeting on Tuesday evening sent a resolution to the highway department, requesting that a construction project be launched this year on trunk highway number one from the city and fifteen miles east. It was pointed out that this stretch of road is in bad condition and hard to maintain, as well as the fact that this is one of the most important roads leading into the city.

musical career with his father, Louis Egermayer's Family Band and Orchestra. He studied at the Dana Musical Institute in Warren, Ohio, and has played with many large and well-known musical organizations. He has been engaged in band direction and instruction for many years.

He played with the 51st Iowa Regiment Spanish-American War band, with the DesMoines, Iowa band, with the Ohio State Band and played for three seasons with the Omaha, Nebraska, Parks Concert band. He is a trumpet player of ability and has played first trumpet with leading symphony and theatre orchestras and with Bachman's Million Dollar band. Mr. Egermayer's wide experience and ability makes him exceptionally well fitted for organization and direction work with adult bands and Thief River Falls citizens are looking forward to having a good municipal band. He also directs the Legion Auxiliary Drum Corps.

Band rehearsals will be held in the auditorium every Monday evening, Mr. Egermayer stated, and he urges bandmen to be on hand promptly at eight o'clock.

To give light weight seeds the best possible chance, seed beds should be in good condition at seeding time.

The desirability of seeding more of our land to forage crops was also discussed. Alfalfa should be given more consideration, says Mr. Brookins, as it is still the cheapest source of high quality nutrients available.

Dr. Billings, well known authority on all phases of turkey production will be in the county on March 5th and 6th to discuss turkey problems, says County Agent R. M. Douglass.

ROOSEVELT ASKS NEW TAX LEVIES IN MESSAGE TUE.

Leaves Methods to be Used To the Discretion of Congress

President Roosevelt dumped the revenue question squarely in the lap of congress this week by offering tax proposals including impositions on undistributed corporation profits and repeal of the present graduated corporation income tax. The president estimated that a tax on undistributed corporation profits would yield the government $1,614,000,000 annually.

The president also proposed:

Processing taxes spread broader and thinner than the old levies outlawed by the Supreme Court.

A "windfall" tax to recover a considerable part of the old processing taxes which were returned to the taxpayers or on which they refused payment.

Repeal of the existing capital stock tax which was estimated to yield $163,000,000 in the fiscal year 1937.

Load Limit to be Posted on SA Roads

The county board passed a resolution this week whereunder load limit notices will be posted on all State Aid roads this spring similar to those used on the trunk highway system.

This action is taken because of the fact that when the trunk highways have been posted in the spring, heavy truck traffic has diverted to the state aid roads cutting them up badly and making expensive repairs necessary. The sheriff has been instructed to deputize the road patrolmen and charge them with the enforcement of the ruling.

Seeks F-L Endorsement

Howard Y. Williams

Howard Y. Williams, national organizer of the Farmer Labor Political Federation, announced his candidacy for the Farmer Labor convention endorsement for lieutenant-governor this week. In a statement to the public he said:

"Minnesota must provide the leadership inspired by Governor Olson and expected by many states forming new parties, in showing what a Farmer Labor party in power can accomplish for the workers, the farmers, professional group, and independent business men. To that end we must elect a majority of the legislature and as a candidate for lieutenant-governor I would campaign with our Farmer Labor endorsed candidates in every legislative district working for their election," declares Mr. Williams in the statement announcing his candidacy.

"I believe in an immediate practical program of production for use especially for the unemployed, designed to give every unemployed person a job and so to relieve the tax burden on the small

Marshall Board to Hold Old Age Pension Hearing

Hearing on the first 65 applications for old age assistance in Marshall county will be held in two weeks, the Marshall county relief administrator announced yesterday.

The postponement was made in order that there may be sufficient time to investigate the eligibility of the applicants, the announcement states.

The board requested the co-operation of the applicants in the investigation by asking that they have records available to prove age, and citizenship or residence.

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR AGED MAY BE LOST STATE

Administration Raises Objections to the State Requirements

CLAIMS TERMS OF LAW NOT CLEAR

Governor Olson Contacts Federal Authorities Urging Acceptance

Grave doubts that Minnesota will be able to share in the federal aid for old age pensions was voiced by county attorney H. O. Berve, upon returning to the city after attending the conference held at St. Paul on Saturday.

The federal old age pension administration objects to the terms of the Minnesota law, Mr Berve stated, because of its ambiguous terms. Exception is also taken to the small appropriation made by the legislature for administrational purposes. The federal administration maintains that $75 000 is inadequate for administration purposes.

Exception is also taken to the fact that the Minnesota law places the local administration of the law in the counties, in some instances in the county board, in others in the welfare board and in the larger cities in the juvenile court. Federal authorities also fear that the clauses in the law which provides for objection by taxpayers and children's responsibility may cause difficulties and unjust practices.

The meeting was rather unsatisfactory, Mr. Berve stated, because apparently the state old age assistance administration is as much up in the air as are the county officials about the status of the state with regard to federal funds. If the federal aid is not forthcoming, the maximum payments will be only $15. The county board announced today that while it is going thru with some of the preliminary work there will be no hearings held nor pensions paid by Pennington county until the matter has been straightened out.

Immediately upon hearing that there was doubt about federal funds being available, Governor Floyd B. Olson got into telephonic communication with Washington from Tuscon, Arizona, where he is convalescing from his recent illness, and demanded that the objections should be waived. "There is nothing wrong with the law that the executive council cannot easily overcome under its broad relief powers," the governor stated.

Kenneth Haycraft, state director of old age assistance, conferred with members of the state board of control on Monday relative to proposed changes in the rules and regulations suggested at the meeting of county commissioners on Saturday. In the meantime county boards are proceeding to consider the applications.

Hans Holmgren Returns After Sojourn in Co-operative Colony

Hans Holmgren, who returned last week after spending the past three months in the Llano Cooperative Colony in Louisiana, gives an interesting account of this experiment in integral cooperation.

The colony which has a population of about 400 members was first established in California in 1914, Mr. Holmgren stated, and was moved to Louisiana in 1921. It has all the features of a city and is governed by a board of directors elected by the colonists. It is the duty of this board to transact all business for the colony. Workers are not paid with money, Mr. Holmgren says, but receive an equivalent amount in fair living

An unusual feature of this colony is the absence of a police force, the colony being so conducted that there has been no necessity for organizing a law enforcement body.

SPEAKER TRACES SCHOOL HISTORY AT PTA MEETING

Interesting Address by Sup't. Morris Bye Recites School Growth

Superintendent Morris Bye traced the educational progress in this city from 1901 to 1935 in his speech before a gathering of the Parents and Teachers Association Monday evening, March 2. He illustrated his talk with charts showing the steady and rapid increase in school enrollments, size of graduating classes, and assessed valuation of the school property and the decrease in the bonded indebtedness of the district.

In 1901, when Independent School District No. 18 was organized as an individual district from Districts 27 and 57, the school buildings included two two-story frame buildings, and one one-story, one-room frame building. The total school enrollment for that year was 530 pupils, twenty-five of whom were in high school. During the twenty years from 1901 to 1921 the increase in enrollment and interest in education made it necessary to provide more school facilities. During those twenty years the Washington building was built in 1902, the Central was doubled in size, the Lincoln High school was built in 1910 and 1911, the Northrop building in 1917, and the Knox building in 1921

The number of students in high school graduating classes has steadily increased from a total of two students graduated in the class of 1904 to approximately 130 in the graduating class at the present time. The bonded indebtedness of the school district has as steadily decreased, from $290,000 in 1901 to $118,000 at the present time. Altogether, Superintendent Bye's talk showed that educational progress in the school district has been very favorable.

Miss Florence Parsons school nurse, gave a report on the preschool clinic conducted last fall. Musical selections were furnished by the high school band under the direction of Mr. S. P. Orwoll, and by the Land O' Lakes quartet. At the close of the meeting lunch was served.

Senator Benson Scores Supreme Court Decision

Decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the Hoosac case and the rice millers' suit against the AAA processing taxes, demonstrating that big business can go into court and evade its tax responsibilities to the government, strike at the very fiscal stability of the government was pointed out in an address delivered in Washington, Feb. 7 by U. S. Senator Elmer A. Benson (Farmer-Labor, Minn.).

"Two recent Supreme Court decisions should awake the American people to the vital effect the assumed powers of the Court have on their welfare," said Senator Benson. "One dealt a blow to agriculture by declaring the Triple A unconstitutional. The other ordered that two hundred million dollars of impounded processing taxes be taken from the treasury and returned, not to those who paid them, but to wealthy processors.

"I have introduced in the United States Senate a bill to restore those millions to the people who paid them. Congress should provide that tax money paid by the American people either goes into the treasury or is returned to the people who contributed it. When such tax money is diverted to great corporations, the processes of democratic government are being undermined."

The senator pointed out that big business began a tax strike last summer and that rich processors, on the advice of the American Liberty League, got court injunctions to evade taxes. Now the federal courts have begun to give the processors almost two hundred million dollars previously impounded he asserted. The courts thus are acting in accordance with the Supreme court's decision in the rice miller's case, Senator Benson said.

"Together with the decision in the Hoosac case," he continued, "The Court's ruling in the rice millers' case virtually grants to processors two hundred million dollars in taxes collected from producers and consumers. It further provides for paying them an additional bonus of more than a billion dollars through contemplated processors' suits against the government for taxes already paid."

"That bonus," the senator emphasized, "is more than the value of all the farm homes and all the farm lands in Minnesota."

Russia Recovers Power, Writer Says

Back in Place It Lost in 1917 Revolution, Walter Duranty Asserts

NEW YORK.—Walter Duranty, for fourteen years a foreign correspondent in Russia, predicts the Soviet republic is "just beginning to exercise its tremendous potentialities' in his new book, "I Write as I Please," to be published tomorrow.

"According to Soviet law a man 'comes of age' at 18, and this is the eighteenth year of new Russia's existence," he writes.

"The fourteen years which I have seen have been a time of growth and construction, a sort of larval period from which the adult creature is only just emerging.

"The U. S. S. R. is now economically and financially independent; it has the largest and perhaps the most powerful army in Europe; it has vast territory and resources, which it is learning to develop and use.

"In short, the U. S. S. R. has recovered the position lost by the czarist empire in 1917 of one of the great world powers. This progress has been paralleled by a remarkable advance of the Soviet leaders in knowledge and wisdom; am I wrong in believing that Stalin is the greatest living statesman and that Litvinov is the ablest foreign minister?

"More important still, Stalin and his associates have carried with them the strongest and most intelligent elements of the Russian people, and have created a national unity and enthusiasm which the czarist empire never knew."

Farm Bureau Takes A Hand in Seed Crisis

The full resources of the Farm Bureau were placed at the disposal of the state in the impending seed crisis, when a meeting held under the auspices of the State Department of Agriculture was held in the office of Commissioner R. A. Trovatten on Feb. 19. The meeting focussed attention on the state's serious seed situation. All persons conversant with the seed situation are alarmed at the poor quality of both corn and small grain seed supplies and acute distress is feared unless all farmers immediately make arrangements for their seed supplies. Those who fail to test their seed now are apt to find weak or worthless stands of grain and corn, seed experts of the department and of the College of Agriculture asserted.

The need for an immediate survey to determine local shortages or surplusses of seed supplies was shown, and county surveys, thru County Farm Bureau offices was pledged. Some counties already have performed this service, and others will take action immediately, it was indicated.

The state seed testing laboratory headed by C. P. Bull, offers its services in testing all seed samples submitted. Samples should be sent in at once, Mr. Bull declared to avoid the annual last-minute rush.

It was the expressed desire of all groups present that all available Minnesota seed be used, in preference to "imports" from other states. Farmers who can buy good locally grown seed are urged to do so. Farm Bureau officers suggest that those having seed to sell or those who must buy seed list their wants in the "Want Ad" sections of their local newspapers, which serve well as local clearing houses. Many County Farm Bureau offices will have seed lists available for inspection.

Soviet Criminals Occupy Large Factory Buildings

Ten years ago 18 criminals were taken to a small and neglected estate near Moscow.

At that time peasants of an adjoining village appealed to the central executive committee to remove this "nest of cut-throats" from the region. The peasants were reassured, but the "nest" remained and not a guard was posted.

The young criminals continued to live on the estate and formed a labor commune. Felix Dzerjinsky, upon whose initiative the commune was organized, aimed to fight criminality by re-education through work.

During the ten years of the commune's existence, the number of its members grew from 18 to 3,100 men and women. It developed from a few small shops until now a knitting mill and a large boot factory operate.

As a principle, each member of the commune must remain there for three years. However, an overwhelming majority remain indefinitely. Many of them, former criminals and waifs, now work in the various Soviet towns as skilled technicians.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Candidate for Senator

Ray P. Chase

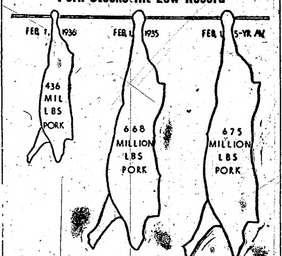
Ray. P. Chase of Anoka has announced his candidacy for United States senator.

Mr. Chase is a former congressman, a former state auditor and in 1930 was the republican candidate for governor against Floyd B Olson. Now he seeks to be the republican candidate for senator, against Olson, who plans to be the Farmer-Labor candidate.

Cong. Theo. Christianson has not yet announced his plans. Secretary of State Mike Holm is thinking about it. N. J. Holmberg intends to enter, Speaker Geo. W. Johnson has said he will, J. R. Sweitzer of St. Paul has talked of it, and Chas. E Elmquist of St. Paul is a possibility.

Mr. Chase was sharp in his denunciation of radicalism in his statement announces intent to file. He said the radicalism battle is "inspired and financed from Moscow" he called Olson "an I. W. W. governor," and he called the present senator, Elmer A. Benson, "an unknown banker."

Pork Stocks Hit Low Record



Stocks of pork and lard held in storage in the United States on February 1 this year were the lowest on record for that date, says the Livestock Market Digest issued by the Central Co-Operative Association farmer-owned livestock selling agency at South St. Paul.

Pork held in storage on that date totaled slightly less than 436 million pounds or 34 per cent less than a year ago, when the total was nearly 668 million pounds. Compared with the five-year average for that date at 675 million pounds, stocks are now 36 percent smaller.

Lard stocks also are small, the February 1 total being 76 million pounds compared with 113 million pounds a year ago and 95 million pounds for the five-year average. This was equivalent to a decrease of 33 per cent from a year ago and a loss of 20 per cent from the five year average.

Stocks of frozen and cured beef also show a drop from a year ago but a substantial increase over the five-year average. On February 1 this year there were 104 million lbs. of beef in storage or 18 per cent less than a year ago and 42 per cent more than the five-year average.

Stocks of frozen lamb and mutton are insignificant when compared with other meats. On February 1 this year less than 3 million lbs. were held in storage. This was 26 per cent less than a year ago and 12 per cent less than the five-year average.

TRIBUTES TO FRANCES E. WILLARD

From the introduction by Lady Henry Somerset, in "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard", by Anna A. Gordon, we quote what she says of her when Miss Willard came to England in 1892. "She was welcomed in this country as I suppose no philanthropist has been welcomed in our time. The vast meeting that was organized to greet her at Exter Hall (London) was the most representative that has ever assembled in that historic building; and certainly no more varied gathering of philanthropists could be brought together with one object than met there that day. On the platform sat members of parliament, dignitaries of our own church and temperance leaders from the Roman Catholic Church ,leaders of labor movement and the Salvation Army, and delgations from the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational Churches and the Society of Friends. The chief Jewish rabbi sent a congratulatory letter and signed the address of welcome, which was also signed by hundreds of local branches of the British Women's Temperance Association.

"What went ye out for to see?" was the question that one asked of one's self as that frail form stood in the midst of the vast assembly. A woman called of God, a woman who preached Christ in politics, Christ in the home, the equality of the purity of men and women, the liberation of the oppressed the destruction of legalized wrong, the upbuilding of all that was great in home government and in the nation. And she who had gone forth without money and without influence, but with an untarnished name, a clear brain an indomitable will, and a God-given inspiration, had in her twenty years of work gathered round her, not the sympathies of her own land only, but the admiration and good will of the whole English-speaking race The time she spent in England was a triumphal procession, and greetings awaited her in every city of importance throughout the whole of Great Britain and Ireland. The synod Hall in Edinburgh, the historic temperance town of Preston, Dublin and Glasgow, vast assemblies in the Free Trade Hall in Manchester, packed audiences in Liverpool and Birmingham—all vied to do her honor; and wherever she went, her clear, incisive thought, the pathos and power of her words and perhaps most of all the sweet, gentle woman, won the heart as well as the intellect of all who met to greet her and assembled to hear her."

Among the hundreds of tributes paid to Frances Willard at the time of her death, February 17, 1898, this brief epitome from Rev. John Clifford, M. A , D. D., President of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches of London is so clear and so true:

"Frances Willard was a woman of fine gifts. She had the insight of a seer, the heart of a philanthropist, the courage of a crusader, the organizing ability of a trained engineer, the enthusiasm of a missionary, the pen of a journalist, the tongue of a skilled orator, and the purity of a saint. She was a typical woman worker in the completeness of her consecration to Christ; in her piercing insight into, and accurate interpretation of, the condition of the people; in the fineness of her courage and the breadth of her sympathy; in her capacity for leadership, and in the whole-hearted use she made of her life for others."

Countless tributes were paid to her memory from the humblest W. C. T .U. worker to the dignitaries of all organizations for good, thruout America and all English speaking peoples as well as from the more than fifty countries where the World Woman's Christian Temperance Union had been organized. Thousands of Willard Memorial meetings will be held on or near February 17, 1936, to tell the beautiful story of her sacrificial life and to carry on the work she so ably planned.

COUNTY OFFICER TAKES BOARD MEET SERIOUSLY

Minnesota.—County board officials in Lyon county take their work seriously. Work must go on, in spite of the weather and blocked roads. That's what Hal Benson, chairman of the Lyon County Board of Commissioners, thinks. Benson, who lives nine miles south of Minnesota, was due to appear at a meeting of the board on last Tuesday, and started out on foot Monday in order to be present at the meeting. The road from his home was entirely blocked with snow, and on leaving it he walked four miles through snow and bitter cold to a point where he was met by his sons with a car. A good deal of shoveling and fighting of cold and snow was necessary, but after several hours they succeeded in getting the car through to Minnesota. The next day Benson continued on his journey to Marshall, the county seat, reaching there in time for the commissioners' session.

Detroit Lakes—Becoming intoxicated after they had tossed off two bottles of Bay Rum and were well on the way to emptying a third, a trio of transients—James Bonner, Dan Wilbanks and Joseph Gerhka were arrested in Detroit Lakes and brought in municipal court where they were admonished and ordered to leave town. Judge Dennis had the two empty bottles of face tonic returned to the local store where they were purchased with the directions that no more of the lotion should be sold to people who might seem disposed to use it for a beverage.

EXTRA! SHORTAGE OF HITCHING POSTS!

Luverne.—Wuxtra! Wuxtra! Luverne reports a shortage of hitching posts! It's no joke, either. Farmers unable to drive their cars because of impassable roads resorted to the old-time bob-sled and team. So many used this method of conveyance, that when they arrived, what few posts were left were quickly utilized, leaving less fortunate farmers to look around in bewilderment for a place to tie their teams. Even the old-fashioned livery barn was gone, and the modern garages were filled with cars. One farmer has been known to solve the hitching post problem by tying his nags to the bumper of an automobile, but cars were as scarce as the proverbial hen's teeth during the storm. Luverne was only one of the points in the state reporting the same situation, and in Springfield one farmer brot in a team that had never seen the sights of the city before, with the result that he had considerable difficulty in controlling them.

GREAT GREAT GRANDCHILDREN OLDER THAN YOUNGEST SON

Fertile—Henry. L. Gaylord, veteran attorney of Fertile, has five great great grandchildren, three of whom are older than his youngest son. Two of the five are girls and three are boys and the ages range from one to fifteen years. Mr. Gaylord's youngest son, Donald, will be two years old on February 28. Mr. Gaylord is 78 years old, and was 17 years of age when he married. He has had 15 children, 14 of whom are living. His oldest son is 60 years of age. He also has eight great grand children. Speaking about records, how about this one. If it can be duplicated, we'd like to see it! And Mr. Gaylord lives in a town called Fertile!

FINDS $500 IN CASH IN SNOW; RETURNS TO OWNER

Sauk Rapids.—In these times most people complain that money is hard to find, but for Kenneth Meyer, 10-year old son of Alfred Meyer, it seems to be comparatively easy. Crossing the street in Sauk Rapids, Kenneth picked up what he thought was a roll of "stage money" in the snow. Putting the money in his pocket, he proceeded to the Edson Grocery store, where Mrs. Edson examined the roll, found it was real money, and reasoned that it was no doubt lost in some way by the bank, as people do not often carry (amounting to $500) that much on their persons. She was right. And to say the bank was glad to get the money back is putting it mildly. As a reward for Kenneth, he was taken to a clothing store and fitted out with a complete new outfit, including suit, in addition to a cash reward.

KNIGHTS OF GRIP FORM STUCK-IN-SNOW GROUP

Pipestone.—A new order of the Knights and Ladies of the "Stuck-in-the-Snow-Bank" Club was organized in Pipestone, when travelers of the road found themselves marooned in that village with the snow blocking roads and railroads. The Knight and Ladies of the road, determined to make the best of their enforced visit, drew up a charter which was signed by 26 people, representing five states and Canada. Stock in the new corporation was issued to each, dividends payable to themselves "and posterity in grins, smiles, and memories at any time upon the recollection of our experiences." E. D. Starboard of Mankato and H. L. Eastland of Glenwood were elected president and secretary of the said Stuck-in-the-Snowbankers. The date of the charter was given as the year of the Great Blizzard, the First.

PIPE 225 YEARS OLD IS FAMILY HEIRLOOM

Lakefield.—How long will a man keep his pipe. In the case of most men probably only a year or two; with some several years, if it's a good pipe. But Henry Rasmussen of Lakefield has a family heirloom in the form of a meerschaum pipe, 18 inches in length from mouthpiece of bowl, that has been passed down from father to eldest son in the family for 225 years at least, and posibly longer. Mr. Rasmussen has no certain knowledge which one of his several great grandfathers was the original owner of the pipe, but he values it highly and expects to pass it on to his eldest son.

Uncle Sam SAYS

LET'S ALL GET BUSY— FIX UP AND PAINT UP—

Nothing else can aid the Nation's business as much as new construction—repairing and modernizing old buildings.

Next to Agriculture, the construction industry, in normal times, is the largest employer of men. One tenth of all manufacturers are engaged in making building materials. One fifth of all freight cars are used in transporting these materials; one eleventh of all wholesalers are engaged in their distribution.

Now is the great opportunity for you to improve your property . . . modernize it . . . repair it, paint it. The work can now be financed wisely and well. Such property increases in value, as a consequence.

New Spring Paint Shipment Just Arrived

The public apparently realize that in SUPERMIX they are getting an extremely high quality paint at a very reasonable cost. They seem to have become more aware of this fact in this vicinity than at other points Oen's Hardware sold more SUPERMIX paints last year than any one of 500 other stores retailing these paints, located in Wisconsin, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa and part of Montana.

Because of the splendid cooperation of The Our Own Hardware group you are given the opportunity of buying this extremely high quality paint at a price you can afford to pay. We believe that there was more SUPERMIX paint sold in Thief River Falls last year than any other one brand. There must be a reason, "it will pay you to investigate."

ELIMINATE INTEREST ON PUBLIC DEBT

Two years ago, the writer in collaboration with a group of other farmer-laborites from different parts of the state formulated a plank for insertion in the state farmer-labor platform and appeared in its behalf before the platform committee. At that time the committee had worked all of one night and a day and having already agreed upon a moneys and banking plank were reluctant to reopen the matter.

The plank was a proposal for the elimination of interest on public debt and when we take into account the tremendous load of interest that, city, village, school districts, counties and states carry, we believe, that some reasonable proposal for its elimination should be given consideration. When we consider that, the city of Thief River Falls eventually pays $175,000.00 in interest in its issue of twenty series bonds for paving in the sum of $300,000.00, and that the average interest paid out of approximately $110,000.00 yearly levy for county purposes by Pennington county is around $43,000.00, the need for relief is quite apparent. These instances are not at all unusual. The sum paid in interest by subdivisions of government is fantastic. And the taxpayer must foot the bill. Our proposal reads as follows:

"We demand immediate legislation making it possible for states and other subdivisions of government to issue non-interest bearing bonds to the federal treasury in return for treasury notes of full legal tender in paymen of all debts, public and private, including import and export duties, at cost of printing and such bookkeeping and recording expenses as may accrue. Such bonds to be retired in the same manner as are state and municipal bonds now sold by subdivisions of government to private investors, thru taxation or otherwise. Such money, upon repayment, shall be withdrawn from circulation until and unless, it is re-issued, similarly guaranteed and secured by bonds of subdivisions of government.

That to safeguard the government against bonds of dubious value a federal board of investment similar to the Minnesota state investment board be set up to pass upon bonds offered by municipalities under such legislation.

Nothing in such legislation shall be construed to deny municipalities the right to issue bonds and sell them as at present on the open market."

We do not claim to be an authority on finance and therefore we have laid this plan before men who have made a considerable study of monetary and financial problems. They have tried to pick holes in it and the only objection they can find is that the Wall Street bankers wouldn't like it. We knew that before of course. However, that should not be an argument against its adoption in the eyes of the common man.

The county conventions are being held at this season and the state farmer-labor convention will be held during the last week of the month. We would like to see those who believe in the proposal get behind an effort to have it incorporated in the 1936 farmer-labor platform.

IT'S NOT ALWAYS THE MANAGER'S FAULT

Our attention is called to an instance where a co-operative creamery which had retrograded changed managers and went forward with a better spirit and greater benefits to the institution. The inference drawn by some people seems to be that the first manager was to blame, with some reflection upon his ability as a manager. Such deductions may not be entirely fair.

There are times when tiffs or jealousies among patrons or stockholders, or disagreements as to policies among the members of the board of directors will cause a damage to an institution in spite of the most sincere and determined efforts of the manager. In such cases it is quite usual for the manager to be the goat. When the trouble finally comes to a head there is usually a change of managers. Patrons, stockholders, board of directors and the new manager dig in their toes and by concerted efforts the institution again goes forward. Not because there was a change of managers, but because the members of the institution realized the need of cooperation and co-operated. Don't be too prone to blame everything on the manager. Most of them are sincere, hard-working and honest.

COLECTING IN ADVANCE

"Socialist Jake" tells us that the republican expectations of getting back into office reminds him of the revenuer that went searching for moonshine stills. It seems that a revenue agent approached a little Kentucky lad and asked him if he knew of any stills being hidden away in the hills. When the lad replied that he knew of one, the agent told him that he would pay him five dollars if he would lead him to it.

The deal was made and they started out. They had gone but a short way when the boy asked for his five dollars. "You'll get it after awhile," the agent said. This happened several times until the agent somewhat piqued said, "you'll get it when we get back, my boy." "But mister," the boy retorted, "you're not coming back."

COULD NOT MAKE IT STICK

Northern Minnesota Leader

We have heard a great deal about friction within the Farmer-Labor movement the past few months through the daily press. We have also heard, from the same source, how state employees were running the entire show.

We read this so often that we looked into the matter. And what did we find? We found that there was as much variance about candidates for state office among state employees as there are among the rank and file throughout this section.

We found that Hjalmer Peterson has just as many state employees favoring him as Elmer Benson has. With which no one can find any fault, since a man is entitled to his freedom of opinion in spite of the fact that he is working for the state.

Among the large majority of the state employees there is resentment against a small group and their senseless activities. But the assertion that state employees are running the party has failed to stick.

SO THIS IS TEMPERANCE

(The National Voice)

Wine . . . a "borrowed" car . . . high speed.

Hattie, with her older sister, was crossing the street. They were on their way to call a doctor for their sick father, when a speeding auto crashed into them, throwing Hattie 110 feet. When the officers arrested the driver, 38 years of age, he told them that one glass of wine was all he'd had.

One glass of wine! A young man is in jail, pending charges of drunken driving, manslaughter and auto theft. Another "tragedy of repeal."

And this is "temperance".

VIGILANTE PROTECTION

(The Progressive)

The bankers of Illinois rejoice in their privately recruited vigilantes that are supposed to prevent bank robberies and catch the criminals when such robberies do occur.

Incidentally, we don't recall reading about many instances when these widely scattered storm troopers, with their banker bought Winchesters, had very materially assisted in bringing roving holdup men to justice.

Seems to us that the late John Dillinger and Baby Face Nelson cruised the highways of Illinois with little interference from the vigilantes, although federal agents sometimes caused them trouble.

We were a bit surprised however, to read news dispatches from Chicago telling of the arrest of a robber gang that obtained $16,300 from the St. Charles (Ill.) National bank last month. One of the men arrested was a member of the banker financed Vigilantes in St. Charles!

No doubt the St. Charles story will cause the bankers and other big business men in the Sucker state who have come to put a lot of faith in the Vigilantes a bit of consternation. They may suddenly question the wisdom of putting high powered firearms in the hands of men who have no legal authority to use them.

It will be interesting, to say the least, to hear the explanation of those who favor the Vigilante system of this incident down in St. Charles.

A VOICE IN THE WILDERNESS

(Minnesota Union Advocate)

Labor has always admired Edward A. Filene, wealthy Boston merchant, who is devoting his remaining years to a crusade for a better understanding between capital and Labor. Filene has been very outspoken in his criticism of Roosevelt's program of scarcity. He has declared some blunt truths to big business for its short-sightedness and utter lack of vision. He has called upon organized wealth to share its profits with those who produce, but with little effect.

Filene's appeals are like a voice in the wilderness. His business associates regard him as becoming somewhat childish in his old age. He has no standing with the National Association of Manufacturers and he has lost caste with the U. S. Chamber of Commerce. Here's why:

Last week Filene spoke at Madison. He hammered at the fundamentals of big business and declared that big business must reform before it is too late.

"It must be hammered into the minds of American bankers and industrialists that wages must go up before buying power can increase and prosperity return," he said.

"America must create its own markets, because no new markets will be opened in Europe for the next 10 or 15 years. Raising wages in this country is the best way of creating our own markets. If wages were raised, consumers in this country would be able to absorb a productivity double that of the 1929 peak.

"I am a capitalist and I believe in capitalism; but I believe in reformed capitalism, not that of the present day. One hundred years from now, today's paradox of starvation in the midst of plenty will be inconceivable."

Is it any wonder that big business regards Filene as a sorry old figure and just the shadow of the man he used to be?

Under a St. Paul date line of Feb. 7, the Fergus Falls Daily Journal contained a political sizeup of the Ninth District, in which it was stated that former state senator Ole O. Sageng of Dalton will likely be a candidate for the Republican nomination for congress at the spring primaries. Senator Sletvold of Detroit Lakes was also mentioned in this connection.

Claiming that Congressman Buckler has lost some of the Farmer-Labor vote in the southern part of the district, this writer brings forth the name of Leonard Erickson as a possible nominee in his place.

Just where Congressman Buckler has lost any of his following in this section of the Ninth District this newspaper is unable to see. We have watched his record quite consistently and in our opinion Mr. Buckler has worked hard and consistently for such measures as might be of benefit to his dist ict, purely an agricultural section. He has stood squarely with the administration on measures designed to and the farmer; has supported drouth and unemployment relief; Old Age Pension bill and the payment of the Soldiers' Bonus at this time all of which entitle him to expect and to receive a much heavier vote than that accorded him in 1934.

As we view it Congressman Buckler will be renominated and re-elected.—Deer Creek Mirror.

WHAT IS INFLATION?

By Maynard C. Krueger

(The first of a series of eight timely articles on inflation by a prominent economist and trade union leader.)

What Is Inflation?

Professor of Economics University of Chicago; Vice President American Federation of Teachers; Member National Executive Committee Socialist Party.

There is hardly a country in the world that has not gone through a period of inflation since the World War, and there has never been a war of any size in modern times that has not been accompanied or followed by a considerable amount of inflation.

Inflation means an increase in the price level but not every increase in prices is inflationary. Inflation may be defined as an increase in the price level growing out of an increase in expenditures more than proportional to the increase in goods available for purchase.

Deflation Means Decrease

Deflation may be similarly defined as a decrease in the general price level resulting from a decrease in expenditures more than proportional to the decrease in goods available for purchase.

In other words if spending increases faster than selling, then prices go up. Such an increase in the price level is called inflation.

There is no difference between inflation and reflation except that some people use the word reflation to mean bringing the price level back to where it used to be. In this sense, a sufficient amount of inflation to bring back the price level of 1929 might be called reflation, while more would be called inflation

What Is Price?

Price is simply the ratio between two things. One is the money that is surrendered to the seller, and the other is the goods obtained by the buyer. If the money is great in proportion to the goods, we say the price is high.

The price level is an increase of all prices. When the price level increases all prices do not go up together or in the same proportion. If the supply of a commodity can be rapidly increased at a low cost, the price of that commodity is not likely to rise very much. The prices of commodities the supply of which cannot be quickly increased, however are likely to rise quite rapidly. The change in the price level is an average of the changes in all of the individual prices.

Of course most people are not purchasers of everything that has a price. A worker does not buy railroads or diamond-studded dog collars. When we calculate the average price of those things that are purchased by the ordinary person, we call it the cost of living.

When Prices Rise

When prices increase, the value of money declines. When prices decrease, the value of money increases. When the prices of goods go up to twice what they were, the purchasing power of the dollar goes down to half what it was, because it takes two dollars to buy what one dollar previously bought. When prices go down to half what they were, the value of the dollar goes up to twice what it was, since 50 cents will buy as much as could previously be bough twith a dollar

The Ups and Downs

If prices rose to ten times what they were, or 1,000 per cent, the purchasing power of money would fall to one-tenth or 10 per cent. If prices rose to almost infinite heights, the purchasing power of money would sink almost to nothing, as it did in Germany in 1923. When the American price level in 1920 rose to 250 per cent of what it was in 1913, the value of the dollar fell to 40 per cent of what it was in 1913. The 1920 dollar was worth only 40 cents in terms of 1913 money because in 1920, $250 was required to buy that which could be bought for one dollar in 1913.

America on the Brink

(A review of Alfred Bingham's book, "Insurgent America" by Robert Whitcomb, author of "Talk United States" and former editor of Midwest Correspondence.)

Has the time come for the Third Party attempted by Teddy Roosevelt and Old Bob LaFollette? Would it be a Labor Party? Or CAN it happen here - a Fascist Party? If not, what is possible, what can we do, what do we want?

At long last we have a theorist in America who is also doing his level best to see straight and true, who is cool-headed and clear-headed in these frantic times, and who is not lost in his theories but is becoming well-grounded in practical politics, in the realistic and objective picture of America so few of us really know. I refer to the editor of Common Sense Magazine, and Secretary of the American Commonwealth Political Federation, Alfred M. Bingham.

The book is, INSURGENT AMERICA, REVOLT OF THE MIDDLE CLASSES. (Harpers $2.50), and the framework for the answers to the above questions is in this title. The philosopher John Dewey has already said the book is genuinely original; and it is probable that it will become the American "Coming Struggle for Power". More than that, the book closes with the famous Common Sense Transition Plan for America (transition from Capitalism to the Co-operative Commonwealth), and a discussion of America's future.

It is strange how, reading this book, you get the impression that it is exactly what we have all been thinking, and that no one but Bingham has thought to say it. With deference to the greatness of Karl Marx, Bingham applies fresh eyes to the present day world and gives the official Marxians, the Socialists and Communists, plenty to think about. The formal dogmatism sometimes called Marxism has blinded many a sincere follower of the original genius.

For instance: Due to technological advance following the capitalistic industrial revolution, the middle classes (Bingham significantly insists upon the plural) are increasing and also changing in character. The industrial proletariat forseen by Marx is on the wane in America. Mr. Milquetoast is of more potentiality than O'Neil's Hairy Ape. Nowhere is there a better description of the psychology of the present-day American people, and the importance of that psychology to politics, than in Bingham's book.

Having rooted this analysis firmly in the American environment, Bingham then analyzes the European situation, particularly Fascism in Germany and Italy. Fascism being a "middle class" and also a "mass" movement, the significance of America's increasing middle classes becomes only too apparent. Fascism being a reaction to the very deep and real fear of losing little "bourgeois" possessions, the forestalling of Fascism in America lies in showing clearly, both to the middle and the working classes, the road to economic security, production for use, "Plenty for All", etc., without the necessity of a Fascist march on Washington.

Thus the Transition Plan, and the reason why every American interested in these questions should read this book.

Passion vs. Reason

One favorite bludgeon used against radicals is that they are for VIOLENT methods of reform; and the old sages sadly shake their heads and remark philosophically: "Violent passions have violent ends."

This is true enough, as far as it goes. He who lives by the sword shall die by the sword. You can't get something for nothing. The cure for war is not to prepare for more war. The cure for the class struggle is not to try to make the two classes live together who are natural enemies, but to cure the thing that MAKES classes—the profit system. The only cure for the profit system is one that will not be submitted to peacefully by those who believe in it. There is no temperizing with the north wind. You can't reason with a forest fire You can't tell a flood to quit.

Every reasonable man agrees that the profit system is responsible for all that ails us economically. Every open-minded men can SEE that most acts of violence are perpetrated by the guardians of property rights, and that the radicals, by merely demanding the simplest of their constitutional rights, trespass on the sacred ground of property.

There are NOT two truths: either you are for human rights or you are for property rights. Reason and passion cannot be divided inseparably; when a man fights for his life he is right, no matter how unreasonable his acts may appear to cool-headed college professors.

If violent passions have violent ends, than one can predict the nasty downfall of many a modern financial dynasty. The only war to end war will be fought at home, when the government will fall into the hands of the people, who have left its manipulation to agents of the upper class. If there is a small amount of violence connected with such an episode, think of how much violence was obviated if capitalism had been allowed to go on and on, wending out its horrible last years in the straitjacket of fascism!

The reasonable course is to exercise violence at the right time.

Do You Believe In Democracy?

If you are a student of present day affairs, it would be bell to give yourself an examination at periodic intervals.

Do I believe in democracy?

Do I have faith in the masses to work out their own salvation?

Or should the masses have leaders to do their thinking for them?

Do I think that the majority is always worng as a great cynic said once?

One of the most insidious pieces of propaganda put out in late years is the one about the death of democracy and the democratic spirit in the United States. True, we enjoyed more actual democracy in the past than we do now; but still we are the most democratic people in the world. Even if democracy has failed to work, is it because it is faulty in itself, or is it that its aims have been twisted by politics, and that the people have not been properly informed? If you think democracy is a lousy system, compare it with any other system—and you will agree with me, I think, that it is the best we have evolved so far.

It is inevitable, of course, that certain people see things clearer than the majority. Under the profit system, such people almost invariably turn out to be big profit-grabbers and benefit themselves only slightly compared with the great harm they do to others. As they ascend, they trample others down, down into the mire

If the majority have always been wrong on every great question, it is because of their ignorance, not on account of their innate wrongness. The only cure for ignorance, one wise old codger said once, is knowledge. It is preposterous to think that, properly educated, a people could continue to be wrong on every question. That is equivalent to saying that knowledge is useless, and that we were better gnawing bones in damp caves.—After reviewing himself thus, the student of economics will see that democracy is not so bad, after all.

A WORLD OF JOY

The time is coming when cooperation will succeed competition; when man will no longer be pitted against man in the degrading struggle for existence. Then the virtues will find expression, and man will develop those higher qualities which dignify his being; he will cultivate the good and beautiful things in life, sing the songs of love and fill the world with joy.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

The self-seeking egotist:—
Psalm 10.

"His ways are always grievous; thy judgments are far above out of his sight: as for all his enemies, he puffeth at them.

"He hath said in his heart, I shall not be moved: for I shall never be in adversity.

"His mouth is full of cursing and deceit and fraud: under his tongue is mischief and vanity.

"He sitteth in the lurking places of the villages: in the secret places doth he murder the innocent: his eyes are privily set against the poor.

"He lieth in wait secretly as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.

"He croucheth and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall by his suaveness and power.

"He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten: he hideth his face; he will never see it."

The flower of love will blossom in his heart and he will 'build his house by the side of the road and be a friend of man."—Eugene V. Debs.

THE CAPITALIST SYSTEM

"Find out where the money is and get there as quickly as you can, and when you get there get all you can get there, and then get out of there with all you can get out of those that are there, before those that are there get out of you all that you got there, after you got there."—Author Unknown.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelson

For the recently ended year 1935 Washington's casualty list shows a total of 113 killed in traffic mishaps. This figure does not, however, by any means complete the picture. There would also have to be added the number of maimed and crippled and the value in dollars and cents of property damaged or destroyed.

* * * *

And everybody has a different explanation of this tragic condition which prevails not only here in Washington, but all over the country.

A large section of the public is inclined to believe that the speed mania is responsible. This, however, the automobile manufacturers vigorously deny. They present graphs and statistics which seem to prove their point.

And the liquor interests pooh-pooh the idea that there is a definite correlation between the rising curve of automobile accidents and the increased use, under repeal of alcoholic beverages. Undoubtedly they, too, can show graphs and statistics in support of their stand.

* * * *

But statistics, it is coming to be realized, can be made to prove most anything. This column is reminded of the well known Milwaukee brewer who, during the war, remonstrated vigorously against the Food Administrator's threat to forbid the manufacture of beer.

The Administrator had indicated that as a war measure, he proposed stopping the manufacture of beer. The considerable amount of grains, thus used, he said, were needed for other and more important purposes.

The brewer hurried to Washington "Tut! tut!" said he. "Don't you know that there is really very little grain used in making beer!"

He proceeded at once to show, by adequate statistics, that it was indeed precisely as he had claimed. . . The breweries used so little grain that it was, in truth, nothing to make a fuss about.

The Administrator was impressed. The data presented by the brewer convinced him. Admittedly if it was thus matters stood, he, the Administrator, had been over-hasty. "We'll say no more about it!" he said hurriedly—or something to that effect.

Whereupon the brewer returned to Milwaukee, happy to be able to resume the interrupted task of stirring the simmering brew pots.

* * * *

But Prohibition came. The brewer was compelled, then, to turn his hand to something else. He elected to manufacture cheese.

Now, cheese-making, as everyone knows is a highly prosaic calling. In fact, so humdrum and monotonous is it that it almost borders on the melancholic. A cheese is . . well, a cheese is a cheese, nothing more, nothing less. It promises neither adventure nor romance and is utterly lacking in sex appeal.

With beer, however it is quite another story. Every ladleful of brew contains possibilities untold. In its inviting foam lurk alluring pictures of 'gemeuthlchheit'. From out of its whispered bubbling come vague echoes of rousing 'gesundheits' and cheery 'prosits'.

And the ex-brewer, while dutifully attentive to his cheeses, could not forget the old days. Nor, incidentally, could he fail to observe that his bank account had, in happier times, showed sturdy and robust growth, whereas it was now anemic and ailing.

In season and out of season, he labored faithfully in the cause of repeal. It was particularly from the economic angle that he attacked the subject. . .

"The enormous amount of grain that would be consumed by the beer industry if Prohibition were repealed," said he, "would immediately solve the farmer's problems. That done, everything else would follow."

Yes . . according to the brewer, if the manufacture of beer wen resumed, the depression would soon be over the old homestead saved, the villain laid by his heels and the faithful lovers reunited, to live happily ever after.

He proved, of course, by adequate statistics, that all this would come to pass, exactly as he had promised. So, already wobbling under the impact of other equally authentic and equally convincing arguments, we caved in. The Prohibition Act was repealed.

* * * *

Yes . . . as we have said, one can prove most anything by statistics!

Farmers' Union Washington Letter

The Farm Bill which takes the place of the outlawed Triple A is now law. This legislation is based on the conservation of the soil and the elimination of erosion. Farmers will be paid for taking land out of production by planting grass, etc. to prevent erosion by wind or otherwise, thus controling production of commodities which are grown in surplus quantities. This law in conjunction with rural rehabilitation enables the Federal Government to acquire land by purchase or rental and return same to range or plant to grass thereby eliminating erosion and preserving their fertility for future use.

It will be the duty of farm organizations together with the Department of Agriculture to work out programs under this law. The benefits derived by farmers will depend on the militancy of these organizations.

The Farmers Union Legislative Committee have gathered considerable information and will do their best to get all they can out of this legislation for the farmers back home.

The discussion on this Bill in Congress was not what kind of a law would do the best job of giving farmers equality with other industry, but rather, due to the Supreme Court decision, what kind of law could be enacted which would come within the scope of the Constitution in light of this sweeping decision, read Senator Norris' speech on this question in the Congressional Record of February thirteenth.

This Committee attempted to amend this Bill so as to provide for the stabilization of butter and cheese prices by placing the marketing of these commodities in the hands of cooperatives and contemplating the elimination of constant fluctuations by taking the surplus off the market during the heavy producing months and feeding it back during periods of deficiency and turning balances, which can not be absorbed this way, over to the Surplus Commodity Corporation to export or give to relief agencies for distribution to the needy. This program would permit not only purchasing, but dealing in, and selling butter and cheese, which can not be done under the present program.

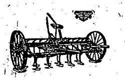
McCormick-Deering Disk Harrow with Tandem Attachment

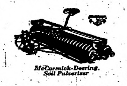
Three types of McCormick Deering Tractor Disk-Harrows, all have "Cross-Draft Connections" making possible quick angling and accurate trailing. Special bearings. Crimp centered heavy disks. A number of special features and advantages, you cannot appreciate until you make comparison with ordinary disk harrows See the NEW on our sample floor.

A New Field Cultivator



The new McCormick-Deering Field Cultivator is a big improvement in construction for better work in the field and lasting quality. Special features added to this machine, depth regulator, high lift for plenty clearance with proper angle of shovels and regulating pressure range, makes this a most ideal machine for preparing seed beds and summer-fallow weed killer. Any type of shovel furnished.

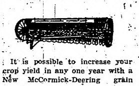
SOIL PULVERIZER



McCormick-Deering Soil Pulverizer

Very few realize the benefits. The difference between a bountiful and a short harvest usually rests upon the availability of the plant food. Normal soil is a reservoir of energy. There may be enough food in a single clod to grow a health, productive plant, but so long as it stays locked up in a clod the little tender roots of the plant cannot obtain the use of it. The McCormick-Deering double gang soil pulverizer renders this food available by pulverizing the clod and by preserving the moisture in the soil.

GRAIN DRILL



It is possible to increase your crop yield in any one year with a New McCormick-Deering grain drill as compared with an old badly worn grain drill to the extent that the increase yield will pay for the cost of a new drill and added profits besides.

There are so many special advantageous features in the new McCormick-Deering grain drill we could not begin to tell here so we invite you to come and see the drill on our sample floor.

Used Automobiles and Truck Values

We have a very large stock of exceptional values in used automobiles and trucks now, with many 1934 and 1935 models besides the large number of older models which we are pricing at special low prices. Many favorable comments on our used values every day. Soon they will be going fast as spring arrives Buy now and get a better choice.

In next weeks issue we expect to announce our complete program for our twenty-fifth anniversary and three day demonstration of March 19th, 20th, and 21st.

NOT SO KEEN

"I visited a phrenologist today and had my bumps read," Bootle told his wife. "He complimented me on the possession of a head with razor like qualities."

"Did he explain what he meant?" his wife asked quietly.

"Well, no," replied Bootle; "but I gathered he'd noticed the keen edge of my ready wit and my clean-cut methods of reasoning."

"H'm!" she murmured. "If he knew you as I do he'd probably consider your head hollow ground."—Answers Magazine.

Local Minded

"Are you afraid of war?"

"Whereabouts?" asked Mesa Bill.

"'Most anywhere."

"No. Crimson Gulchers can shoot or run, as the case may require. We haven't any women or children to protect."

A Wise Lad

"Mummy, did you ask daddy to buy me a pony?"

"Yes, dear, for a whole, whole hour. But he would not hear of it."

"Then you did try hard enough."

"Darling, I did what I could."

"Did you have hysterics?"

Correct Use

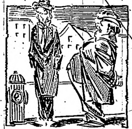
Pupil's Exam Paper—The teacher told us to look up the word "analysis" in the dictionary.

WHAT SAY?



The Tall One—When I say a thing I mean it. I never change my mind.

The Short One—I'm mighty glad to hear it. I remember some mighty interesting things you said about paying back ten dollars you once borrowed.

Gentle Retort

"If I had a son who was a bit daft I'd make a minister out of him," shouted the man who had just been rebuked.

"You probably would," said the minister, pleasantly, "but I see that your father had different ideas."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Audience

"You can always tell your troubles to a policeman."

"You can if you're lucky," said the policeman, who was writing a ticket. "But a driver like you is lucky not to be telling 'em to a grand jury."

Exercises

"Are you fond of music?"

"I used to be," said Mr. Dustin Stax, "but I gave up piano lessons in boyhood. I'm now looking for a professor who can teach me to play a proper tune on the cash register."

Tribute

"Do you enjoy flattery?"

"Very much," said Senator Sorghum. "While flattery may not always imply sincere admiration, it invariably indicates genuine respect for power."

Just Average

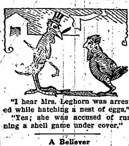
Husband (reasonably)—Well, my dear, no man is perfect.

NOT ON THE LEVEL



"I hear Mrs. Leghorn was arrested while hatching a nest of eggs."

"Yes; she was accused of running a shell game under cover."

A Believer

"Do you believe in Santa Claus?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "Playing up Santa Claus is one of the best ways of boosting business I know of."

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the airways emergency station. In it are Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to the platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows her contempt for Garth.

CHAPTER II.—Through Garth's guidance the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to take a chance in investing a small amount. Sensing the treachery that lies ahead, Garth secretly removes a small part from the motor of the plane.

CHAPTER III.—Huxby and Lilith taunt Garth with his "gullibility," but their tone soon changes when they try to start the crippled plane. Returning to shore they try to force Garth to give up the missing part. Garth manages to set the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls, where it is wrecked. He points out to the enraged trio that he is their only hope in guiding them out of the wilderness, and to kill him would be fatal to all.

CHAPTER IV.—Garth begins the work of preparing for the long journey. He insists that the others help. Moccasins must be made, and Ramill and his daughter hardened for the hardships ahead in their toilsome trek to the outpost on the Mackenzie.

CHAPTER V.—Returning from a long sleep in the woods, Garth finds the party has stolen the tea and sugar he has been saving for emergencies. He makes no objection, simply pointing out that he is accustomed to a strict meat diet, and that they are hurting only themselves. The work of getting ready for the trip continues. Huxby refuses to help, and works on the mining claim.

Garth himself was ready to quit when, in the twilight, they came down to where the steep pitch eased off on a small patch of tundra. He opened his pack and spread the blanket on the dry gravel in a hole under a pile of boulders.

At sight of the fat with the frozen caribou and smoked moose meat in the pack, Lilith at once gathered dry moss. This time the raw caribou flesh was seared over a fat-fed fire of the moss before being eaten. After the meal, Garth opened the gold-mounted cigar case and handed one of the Havanas to its owner.

Mr. Ramill hastily bit off the end and lighted the cigar in the flame of the fat and moss fire. As he put it to his lips he hesitated, then, with a perceptible effort he turned to offer it to his daughter.

"Uh—ladies first, my dear."

Lilith started to thrust out her hand. Something seemed to catch it. She glanced at Garth and stood up.

"You need it more than I do, Dad. Good night, everybody. I'm dog tired."

Her father and Huxby looked at each other in astonishment. Garth was less surprised. He smiled to himself as he put more moss and fat on the fire and coiled up beside it.

Before sunrise, Garth was again awake. He filled the little pot with ice and set it in the edge of the rebuilt fire, then began cooking caribou meat. The others wakened almost too stiff to move. But all managed another big meal of the meat. To top it off, Garth had Lilith boil a little tea in the water from the melted ice.

After the hot drink, even Mr. Ramill managed to hobble down the now fairly easy slope. The exercise gradually warmed and relaxed stiffened muscles.

The end of a long day's hike at last brought the party down the miles of tundra slopes to the edge of timberline.

Garth predicted they would reach canoe water on the seventh day. But during that morning Mr. Ramill turned an ankle. Even after much soaking in a cold spring and tight bandaging by Garth, the sprain held the millionaire down to a slow hobble. An aspen staff enabled him to travel slowly until the noon meal. After that the pain overcame him. He refused to move.

Garth looked doubtfully at the none too large supply of food that was left. His pack now weighed little more than the platinum alloy in Huxby's wolfskin knapsack.

He had allowed everyone to eat without stint. That had been necessary in order to keep up the strength of the chechahcos. But, as he had foretold, the country was barren of game. There was none too much meat left in his pack.

"If you can't carry on, Mr. Ramill, you'll have to stay here and keep bathing your ankle in this rill," he said. "We're too short of food, though, to lose any time. The stand of birch at the stream is so small that I'll need a full three days to build our canoe. The three of you follow down this brook as soon as you can."

When he picked up a few pieces of meat and his rifle, Huxby spoke: "I should have the gun to protect Miss Ramill."

"There's nothing here to attack you," Garth replied. "Just possibly, I may find game at the stream."

"Could another pair of hands be helpful in making the canoe?" Lilith asked.

"Well—yes."

The girl looked at Huxby. He did not speak or move. She stood up. "Dad, you'll be all right with Vivian. I am going to help Alan."

Huxby rose, frowning. He looked at Garth with cold rancor. "I see no need for anyone to go. I certainly cannot permit my fiancee to accompany you."

"She might have helped. You'd be only a hindrance," Garth replied.

He swung away at a rapid pace. But behind him he heard the girl speak sharply: "Don't be silly, Vivian. Get out of my way."

After that came a quick patter of moccasins. Garth kept on for some distance as if he did not hear the sound. Then he halted behind an alder thicket to face the girl. She was so close behind that she almost ran into him. He smiled into her eager eyes.

"This is a happy surprise, Lilith."

Her eyelids sank, and her cheeks crimsoned under their coat of pitch-and-grease mosquito dope. "You needn't fancy I'm running after you. It's—it's only because I want to get out of this beastly North country of yours—and be rid of you, too!"

"So, that's it. Well, you're a good hater, but you're a real sport. You're game. Tag along, if you wish."

At the edge of the swamp he stopped beside a game trail. Lilith came up beside him, breathing deeply from the long and rapid walk. He pointed to the big water-filled hoof prints in the mud.

"We may be in luck. Moose passed here yesterday—the water is clear in the tracks. They may not have gone too far. Stay here, or be quiet."

An uptossed leaf showed that the wind was in his favor. He started along the trail. The tracks were still a day old when they turned out into the muskeg toward a lily pool.

Garth skirted on along the border of the swamp to where a bend of the stream twisted in close to dry ground. Here was the grove of birch of which he had spoken. He pointed to the fringe of willows below the birch.

"Those bitten twigs—still white. They've been eaten off less than an hour ago. Stay here."

After another test of the wind, he went ahead alone, silent as a lynx. Luck was with him. As he rounded the bend he saw the immense antlers of an old bull moose rise above the willows on the bank. Before the startled beast could plunge into the water Garth dropped him with a bullet through the brain.

At the crash of the shot, three moose cows with calves broke cover beyond the bull. The distance was considerable and brush obscured Garth's aim. He had to shoot four times to bring down one cow and her calf. But that was enough.

His shout brought Lilith on the run. She looked delightedly at the bull. "Oh, no chance now of starving!"

"That's not all," he said. "I can build a hide canoe in two days; a better one than can be made from those small birches."

When, a day later, Mr. Ramill came limping after Huxby to the smoke-marked camp, Lilith was still hanging moose meat on alder poles over the smudge-fire.

"Pah! To think I've lugged all that old meat, and he's killed again. Why didn't he come back and tell me?"

The girl gave him an odd glance. "We've been too busy, old dear. Where's the blanket?"

"I couldn't pack everything. If I'd known, I could have left this confounded smoked moose and brought the blanket instead."

"Why not have left your load of metal? Didn't you consider that Dad and I will get far more than fifteen thousand dollars' worth of comfort out of that blanket?"

His lips tightened. "Sorry, darling. The thought of a common dirty blanket as against all the platinum—I did not even think of it. Now of course I realize. But it's too late."

"Yes," she agreed, "it's too late. Dad, you were a real sport not to wait for Alan to come back and carry you."

The millionaire had slumped down to rub his swollen ankle. He looked up at Huxby, with a bantering smile. "We couldn't permit our girl to elope with a woods vagabond, could we, Vivian?"

The engineer did not smile. His face went blank. "Where is that roughneck, Lilith?"

"Down in the willows, working hard for us. Won't you be glad when we're rid of him?"

"Won't you?"

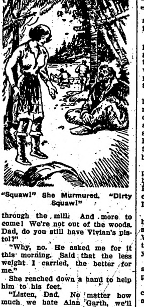
"Well, I'm not so sure as I was. At present he is far more agreeable company than you are."

Huxby stiffened and went off towards the willows without any reply. Mr. Ramill peered up shrewdly at his daughter.

"That was pretty hard even from you, Lilith. Try to keep in mind how matters will stand as soon as we get out of this damnable mess."

For a long moment Lilith Ramill stood silent. She looked down at her grimy tattered sports suit, at her bloodsmeared hands and broken fingernails. The dimmed glitter of the diamond in her engagement ring failed to hold her gaze. It passed on down to her foxskin leggings and moosehide moccasins.

"Squaw," she murmured. "Dirty squaw! He certainly has put us through the mill. And more to come! We're not out of the woods. Dad, do you still have Vivian's pistol?"



"Squaw!" She Murmured. "Dirty Squaw!"

"Why, no. He asked me for it this morning. Said that the less weight I carried, the better for me."

She reached down a hand to help him to his feet.

"Listen, Dad. No matter how much we hate Alan Garth, we'll never get out of the muskegs without him. Haven't you noticed Vivian's eyes? You must ask him to give you back the pistol."

"But—it's his. And to rasp his self-esteem with such an intimation of distrust—"

"What's more important—his feelings, or Alan's guidance—if anything happens to Alan— Make some excuse."

Mr. Ramill got to his feet and limped beside her down to the stream bank. Huxby stood with his morose gaze fixed upon Garth, who was tying willow ribs on the gunwale of his canoe frame with rawhide thongs.

The millionaire spoke in a casual tone: "How long will it take to put on the birch bark?"

"We'll use the moose hides, sir. They weigh more but will be much stronger. You might ask Huxby to chop down a birch and cut it into five-foot lengths. We'll have to split the wood to make paddles."

"So?" Mr. Ramill turned to his prospective son-in-law. "You may as well return the pistol to me, Vivian. It will hamper your chopping, and as we're now to be in a canoe, its weight will not bother me."

Huxby sat motionless, taken aback. Before he could think of an excuse to refuse, he met Garth's coolly inquiring gaze. He turned away and drew the pistol from inside his tattered coat, and handed it to Ramill.

Another day saw the canoe complete. The cow and bull hides, gummed and sewn together, formed the cover, hair side in. The result was, a craft large enough for the party but shorter and broader than the average canoe.

At Garth's suggestion, Lilith had begun tanning the calfskin. Ramill tended the smudge-fire. After cutting the birch billets, Huxby had at first sat around brooding. Then, suddenly he went off up the brook. He did not come back until after the canoe was finished. But he brought the abandoned blanket.

Garth was beginning to shape into paddles the slabs of wood that he had rived from the birch billets. He glanced from the blanket to the clouds overhead, and from them to Lilith's tattered skirt.

"Not half bad, Huxby. That blanket will soon be needed. Too splendid a sunrise this morning. We're in for a storm. Miss Ramill, that calfskin is cured enough for you to wear. Make a skirt of it."

"How about Vivian's shoes?" she asked. "He's walking on his uppers."

"He's welcome to my old moccasins. They may last out our portages."

Though Huxby's ears reddened, he accepted the castoff footgear of the man from whom he had sought to bilk a claim worth at least a million dollars.

When Garth launched the canoe, he fastened it to the bank with a line made from the trimmings of the moose hides. For anchor he used the wolfskin knapsack with its weight of platinum alloy.

"May as well make it useful," he met Huxby's look of moody protest. "You are to have the bow seat, and so can continue to guard my 60 per cent, along with—"

A clap of thunder and the swish of a wind gust through the birch tops checked Garth's banter. He spoke a quick order: "Leanto the blanket on that knoll between the trees, front this way."

A glance at the onrushing black clouds of the thunderstorm sent even Huxby hurrying to help the others. While they tied the upper corners of the blanket with rawhide thongs and weighted the back edge with logs, Garth pulled the canoe ashore and placed it bottom up over the smoke racks.

When, three hours later, the crashing thunderstorm passed over and the heavy downpour of rain ceased, all the party were wet from the drip through the blanket. But the fire still smoldered and the half-smoked meat was dry under the canoe.

Public Ownership and Co-operative News Notes from Far and Near

POWER COMPANIES SPREAD FALSE CHARGES ABOUT CO-OPERATIVES

West Duluth, Minn.—Here are some of the anti-electric-co-op charges being spread by the private power companies in the territory, according to John A. Anderson, member of the Arrowhead Co-operative Electric Association:

In case of storm damage, members will be assessed.

If the association fails, members must dig down in their pockets to pay the REA loan.

Members must sign up for 20 years.

All False

All three charges are false. Anderson shows, for the lines will be fully insured against storm damage: the REA takes no lien on the property of members but in case of failure can only take over the lines and equipment; members do not sign for 20 years or for any other period—they buy a share of stock in the co-op which borrows from REA with privilege of repaying a little each year over a period of 20 years.

The Arrowhead co-op is now thoroughly organized and hopes to get poles set and be in position to supply its members with power in early spring.

FARMERS TOLD HOW UNFAIR WAGES HURT FARM GOODS PRICES

Decatur, Ill.—Delegates to the Illinois Agricultural Association convention in Decatur were made acquainted with the year-old strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union against four Decatur cotton goods plants. Farmers saw the union girls on the picket line and became interested.

The union made its Jan. 30 edition of the Decatur Weekly News a farmer issue, giving prominent space to the farmers' convention. The paper tells of the use of the notorious Bergoff strikebreakers and gunmen against girl strikers. How the courts lined up with the bosses also was told.

Farm wives were asked to remember that the following brands of cotton garments are unfair to organized labor: Decatur Maid, Home Made, Trixie, Bonnie and Darlene.

"Farmer prosperity and worker prosperity go hand in hand," the delegates were told. "Workers can't pay a decent price for your products or buy as many as they need unless they get a decent wage for their work."

COOPERATIVES IN 1935

A report by the Farm Credit Administration shows that the agricultural cooperative marketing movement made substantial progress in 1935—as it has in almost every year since its inception.

Almost 8,000 associations engaged in marketing farm commodities during the year. They had a total membership of 2,490,000 farmers, and did a total volume of business of $1,343,000,000—a gain of 14.2 per cent over 1934.

The largest number of cooperatives was in the North Central States. On the basis of business transacted, dairy products constituted the most important commodity marketed by co-ops, followed in order by grain, fruits and vegetables, livestock, cotton products, and poultry and products.

EXPERIMENTS WITH CHLORINE GAS USED IN WAR; OVERCOME

Mahnomen.—Curious to find out whether chlorine gas was as deadly as his instructor had told him, Merle Bright, chemistry student at the Mahnomen high school, was overcome by the fumes of the gas. Classmates immediately secured ammonia, which counteracts the effects of the chlorine gas. A physician was called and the youth ordered to bed. He recovered from the effects of the poisoning the next morning. The chlorine was prepared in the laboratory for demonstration purposes, and a bottle of it was placed on the instructor's desk. Before the instructor arrived for the beginning of the class, Bright removed the cork and took a deep breath. The gas, which is used in warfare, causes violent coughing, copious tear flow, and a congested condition of the lungs. When strong enough, it causes practically instant death.

ELECTRIC CO-OPS FORM FEDERAL BODY

Minneapolis, Minn—The Federated Electric Co-operative, a central organization, was formed at a meeting of representatives of rural electric co-ops here Jan. 25. Delegates were present from Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa. The meeting was called by the Midland Co-op. Wholesale.

The meeting recommended that local electric co-ops charge $5 as a membership fee.

Approval was voted of the Norris Bill, which would extend the government's rural electrification program for nine years and would provide that money paid back to REA on loans would become a revolving for further loans.

Name Incorporators

Five Minnesotans were named as incorporators: David Anderson, Moose Lake; H. T. Johnson, Audubon; E. F. Luehr, Spring Grove; Paul Ferguson, Jackson; and Wm. Onkka, Cokato.

HIBBING SOCIETY MAKES STURDY GAIN

Hibbing, Minn.—A sales increase of 22.33 percent over 1934, and a net gain of $2,080.02, were reported to the annual meeting of the Consumers' Co-operative Company held Feb. 1 and attended by about 90. By vote of the meeting the net gain will be returned to the patrons in the form of a 4 percent refund on purchases, 2 percent to be given in trade and 2 percent in shares. Cash register slips must be in by March 1.

In spite of heavy building expense during the year, the total expenses dropped from 15.25 percent of sales in 1934 to a little over 13 percent, Manager Niilo Maki stated.

Four members were elected to the board: J. W. Maki, Joe Juvonen, Oscar Lindgren, and John Walto.

CO-OPS IN THE TROPICS

The concluding paper, on Co-operation in tropical countries, by C. F. Strickland, is easily worth the entire price of the book. Here we learn of the unusual types of co-operative societies found in Africa and the Orient, including the Young Men's Associations of Japan, one of whose functions is to teach their members to get up early in the morning!

Strickland was a government registrar of co-operative societies in India. Out of 17,000 societies under his charge in one province, 3,000, he states, had not one literate member. The accounts, presumably, were carried in the committee members' heads! It was Strickland's business to keep these societies from failing. And yet he did not become discouraged but has written a paper which shows his faith in the capacity of downtrodden peoples to develop co-operative living, raising themselves out of poverty.

SCHOOL OPENS FARMERS UNION TRAINING

St. Paul, Minn.—The Farmers' Union Central Exchange is conducting a co-operative training school here for managers and employees of Farmers' Union oil companies. The school opened Feb. 10 and will continue for 3 weeks. There are 23 students in attendance, most of them hailing from North Dakota and Montana, with a sprinkling from Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Bookkeeping is being taught by Walter Jacobson, chief auditor of the Northern States Co-op. League. Other instructors are Francis Ingerson, H. W. Culp, Paul Lambert and V. S. Alanne, the latter being instructor in Principles and Methods of Consumer Co-operation.

CO-OP SCHOOL BELL RINGS AT JAMESTOWN

Jamestown, N. D.—Due to the blizzard, only about half of the 30 students who were registered for the 4-week school of Co-operation, were on hand at the opening Feb. 10. The school is being conducted by the Farmers Union in collaboration with the Northern States Co-op. League. Most of the students are young people from the farm who want to learn more about the Co-operative movement.

C. R. Crews, assistant secretary of the N. S. C. L., Morris Erickson, Mrs. Frances Butts, and Mrs. G. H. Edwards are instructors.

Like Red Cherries

THE poets of the Seventeenth Century, who knew a good thing when they saw—or tasted—it were wont to compare lovely girls' lips to cherries. It was way back in 1606 that the following words were set to music by Richard Alison in "An Howres Recreation Set to Musike":

"There is a garden in her face,
Where roses and white lilies show;
A heavenly paradise is that place,
Wherein all pleasant fruits do grow.
There cherries hang that none may buy,
Till cherry ripe themselves do cry."

And it was not many years later that Robert Herrick wrote this possible echo of the earlier lines:

"Cherry ripe, ripe, ripe, I cry,
Full and fair ones—come and buy!
If so be you ask me where
They do grow, I answer, there,
Where my Julia's lips do smile,— There's the land, or cherry-isle."

Worth Tasting

Now everyone will freely admit that cherries of the above description, as well as cherries that grow on trees, are well worth tasting. There are no fixed formulas for enabling you to taste the first. You'll have to work that out for yourself. But, fortunately, there are innumerable good recipes for tasting the second. Here are some of them:

Royal Purple Parfait: Soften one tablespoon gelatin in four tablespoons cold water. Dissolve in one cup boiling hot grape juice. Add the syrup from a No. 2 can Royal Anne cherries. When the gelatin begins to set, add the stoned and halved cherries, and pile in tall, slim parfait glasses. Chill in refrigerator. Top with whipped cream. Makes six to eight servings.

Cherry and Apple Pie: Pare, core and slice two greening apples and arrange in a pastry-lined pie tin with the drained contents of a No. 2 can red pitted cherries. Mix together two-thirds cup sugar and one and a half tablespoons flour, and sprinkle over. Dot with three tablespoons butter, and pour over one-third cup cherry syrup from the can. Cover with top crust and bake at 450 degrees for ten minutes, or until crust is set, and then 350 degrees for thirty minutes. Makes one large pie.

A Titillating Taste

Cherry Torte: Drain contents of a No. 2 can pitted red cherries, and place in refrigerator until ready to use. Add enough water to the cherry syrup from the can to make one cup. Combine three-eighths cup sugar with one and a half tablespoons cornstarch, add to cherry syrup and cook over a low fire until thick and clear, stirring constantly. Beat two egg yolks slightly, add hot mixture slowly, cook one minute longer (do not boil), then cool. When cold, fold in two stiffly-beaten egg whites and one cup cream, whipped.

Meanwhile, have ready twenty-four rounds of pastry. Roll pastry thin, cut in 3-inch rounds with cookie cutter, prick with a fork and bake to a light golden color. Cool. Allow three rounds to a serving. Put the three rounds together with the cherry filling, leaving plenty on top. Cover with the cherries and garnish around the torte with a piping of whipped cream. Serves eight. If desired, one large torte may be made by baking three or four large pastry rounds and putting them together in the same way.*

Snow and Cold Keeps Road Crews Humping

Snow blocked roads and blustery weather continues to be the order of the day in this section. A few days of warmer temperatures earlier in the week was again terminated when the thermometer dropped to 22 below this morning. Considerable snow and shifting winds has made all county aid and most state aid roads difficult to keep open. The state highway maintenance crews have had trouble keeping the trunk routes open, some stretches on number one and 59 being impassable.

The temperatures for the week were as follows:

Howard Williams Seeks Lieut.-Governor's Seat

home-owners, renters, and farmers. The practicability of this program is fully demonstrated by the experience of the Scandinavian countries.

"The outstanding difference in the organization of the Republican and the Democratic parties and the Farmer Labor party is the rank and file control of the latter thru the Farmer Labor Association. I believe in strengthening this democratic organization in every possible way. Only those standard-bearers should be selected who believe sincerely in such rank and file control, who are opposed to clique domination and who will accept party discipline. I covet working with the Farmer Labor Association leaders in the realization of a just and equitable program for our state. I will at all times labor with the rest of the official Farmer Labor family to further the development of a strong Farmer Labor Association.

"I believe that my experience as organizer and campaigner in Minnesota and in the nation since the beginning of the movement will be of great value in office. My experience as a farm hand, a farm owner, a miner, a book-store owner, a soldier and a settlement worker will aid me in understanding the problems of those in all walks of life. My two years in France as a soldier have made me an ardent worker for peace."

Mr. Williams was a captain in the Tenth Engineers during the World War, decorated by the French and cited by General Pershing for conspicuous action. He has been a worker in the Farmer Labor movement since its beginning. He promoted the Mid-West Youth Congress and the Minnesota Conference for Progressive Social Legislation. Roosevelt's New Tax

Repeal of the corporation excess profits tax which was estimated to yield $5,000,000 in 1937.

Repeal of the exemption of dividends from the normal tax on individual incomes.

The graduated corporation income tax which the President proposed to repeal was estimated to yield $826,000,000 in the fiscal year 1937.

Treasury experts were understood to estimate the proposed new levy on undistributed corporation profits would not only replace the $994,600 000 taxes which would be repealed but would provide an additional revenue of $620,000,000 from 1936 corporation incomes.

The President told congress invalidation of the processing taxes left a deficit in the budget of $1,017,000,000 and that the cash bonus bill would add an annual charge of $120,000,000 a year.

"We are called upon, therefore" he said, "to raise by some form of permanent taxation an annual amount of $620,000,000

"It may be said, truthfully and correctly, that $500,000.00 of this amount represents substitute taxes, in place of the old processing taxes, and that only $120,000,000 represents new taxes not hitherto levied."

The chief executive said he was leaving "to the discretion of congress" the formulation of appropriate taxes. But he invited the attention of congress to "a form of tax which would accomplish an important tax reform, remove two major inequalities in our tax system, and stop 'leaks' in present surtaxes."

Land O'Lakes Convention

manager for Land O' Lakes incorporated, Mr. Raymond Mathun. The district fieldman, Mr. Lager, was called upon to award the efficiency and cream grading prizes of the district. O. B. Stamnes of Halma, took first prize for efficiency with a score of 99.09 percent for the year. Norman Aslakson of Bronson followed for second prize with a score of 99.03 percent and Carl Lundberg of Warren took third place with a score of 99 02 percent. In cream grading, N. E. Olson of Leonard took first prize with a score of 98.51 percent; Ed Evans of Eddy took second with a score of 96.98 percent and Hjalmer Martin of Newfolden and Otto Bakken of Oklee each received a third prize, being tied with a score of 9466 percent.

"Sy" Pesek of Crookston, state assistant dairy and food inspector awarded a prize to Henry Anderson of the Viking creamery being the second prize for attendance at the Red River Valley Dairymen's association convention.

John Brandt, president and general manager of Land O' Lakes opened his speech by stating that the dairy industry will need organization because it is on the increase in production and unless thru sales efforts and organization the consumption of dairy products are increased, the producers may face some tough conditions in the near future. He recounted the organization and trials of the early creameries and pointed out with charts showing the prices received for their products before the Land O' Lakes was organized fluctuated from 1.34 cents to 15.5 cents below New York extra markets. He showed by the charts that the fluctuations thru Land O' Lakes marketing has ranged within 1.4 to 2 15 below New York extra market. As a result, Mr. Brandt pointed out, the distribution agencies have been unable to milk the farmers in the way they used to and therefore have been reduced in number to a few large companies. If Land O' Lakes should go out of the picture, Mr. Brandt stated, the creameries would be forced to sell to just these few companies who would buy the butter at their own figure and at the same time run trucks past the doors of the little co-operative creameries buying the cream and competing with the co-operatives in manufacturing butter, eventually driving them out of business. Politicians this year will hold forth from the platform and over the radio with promises of various and devious methods of dividing up the nation's wealth, Mr. Brandt said, but the best way to divide it up is to keep the other fellow from getting it in the first place by patronizing your own institutions.

He cited the savings that have been made possible to the creameries thru the supplies department of the Land O' Lakes and complimented the operators, boards of directors and the fieldman of the district, on the splendid record they have made this year.

The Land O' Lakes quartet, from the local plant sang several selections which were well received.

OKLEE CREAMERY ANNUAL MEETING SET FOR MAR. 20

Annual Statement Shows Fine Condition and Efficient Management

The annual meeting of the Oklee Co-operative creamery scheduled to be held on Friday, February 28 was postponed due to the lack of a quorum. Deep snows and impassable roads made it impossible for the farmers to get into town to attend the meeting. As a consequence, the board of directors decided to postpone the meeting until Friday, March 20th.

The annual report which was released Friday shows the creamery to be in excellent financial condition, with assets of over $17,000 and liabilities of slightly over $3,000. $73,384.58 was realized from the sale of butter manufactured and a total of $66,037.23 was paid out for butterfat. Total income from other sources, totaled $500.83. A net surplus on hand for further distribution of $979.46 was reported.

The statistical report showed very satisfactory results of manufacture with 170 active patrons, having delivered 838 306 pounds of cream during the year. An average net price of 26.04 cents per pound of butter manufactured and an average price of 31.75 cents per pound for sweet cream to pool patrons was reported. 67.35 percent of the butter manufactured graded Land O' Lakes quality. The cost of manufacture was slightly under two cents per pound and with the general expense the cost per pound was 2.68 cents per pound.

Telephone Service Gains Report Shows

A gain of 466,500 telephones in the Bell System last year making a total of 13,844,000 telephones in the system, is reported by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, in its annual report for 1935 which has just been released. This company is the parent company of the Bell System, of which the Northwestern Bell Telephone is a part.

In addition to the telephones owned and operated by the Bell System, there are about 3,506,000 telephones operated by 6,600 other companies which connect with its lines, making a total of about 17,350,000 telephones in the United States or more than half of the telephones in the world. Practically any one of these telephones can be connected promptly to any other

Overseas telephone service was extended during the year to four more countries, the Dominican Republic Honduras, Paraguay and Iceland, making 67 countries that now can be reached from nearly every telephone in the United States. The volume of overseas telephone messages increased 13 per cent over the preceding year. At the end of 1935, ship-to-shore telephone service was available to and from 20 transatlantic liners.

The high standards of telephone service were fully maintained in 1935, the report says, and further improvements were made. For example, comparing service in 1935 with 1929, operating errors on local calls have been reduced 40 per cent, the number of long distance calls handled while the calling persons remain at the telephone increased from 71 to 92 per cent, the average time for making connections on long distance calls has been reduced from 2.8 to 1.4 minutes, and troubles cleared on subscribers' lines and telephones on the same day as reported increased from 87 to 96 per cent.

Rev. H. A. Larson of St. Hilaire visited at A. P. Hegstrom's on Monday.

ANNUAL MEETING HELD BY CO-OP CR'Y AT GRYGLA

Report of Past Year's Work Is Made to Assembled Stockholders

567,893 pounds of cream were received at the Grygla Co-operative creamery during 1935, according to the annual report released at the annual meeting Saturday, February 29th. 129,214 pounds of this was sweet cream and a total of 210,260 pounds of butter was manufactured. 97,158 pounds of Land O' Lakes grade butter was shipped out from the plant. An average of 25.77 cents per pound was received for all butter manufactured and an average of 27.72 cents per pound was paid patrons for butterfat. The total cost of operation averaged 3.24 cents per pound of butter manufactured.

A net loss of $221.59 was reported on dairy products, but this was offset by a gain on sidelines and other income amounting to $653.17 leaving a net income for the period available for surplus or distribution of $857.78.

The service station department reported a fine volume of business with a total of 19,686 gallons of coop gas sales; 8,314 gallons of competitive gasoline sale and 930 gals of motor oil and 747 pounds of grease having been disposed of. Total operating expenses on the station amounted to 5.96 percent of sales. Other sidelines handled include: cheese, ice cream, poultry eggs, feed, flour salt and turkey dressing service.

The Grygla co-operative creamery association built a new creamery building last summer and now has one of the finest plants in the district. The assets of the association amount to over $25,000.00 with a net worth of $9809.04.

Directors elected at the meeting were as follows:

Mrs. Adolph Erickson, Sivert Askeland and Martin Sandsmark.

Benson Will Abide Convention Choice

Replying to a question as to his attitude towards endorsement by the Farmer-Labor convention or a wide open primary, Senator Elmer A. Benson, in Washington today said:

"I am interested primarily in the sucess of the Farmer-Labor Party in the forthcoming election. I am motivated entirely by what I believe will accomplish most for the Farmer-Labor program, both state and nationally.

"Minnesota cannot afford to return its government to the reactionary elements who in the past misruled our state, dissipated our natural resources, and exploited our people in the interest of the privileged few.

"If the convention sees fit to endorse me as the Farmer-Labor candidate for Governor, I shall make the fight, utilizing every talent and effort. Should the convention see fit to endorse someone else, I shall immediately withdraw from the race and do everything within my power to help elect the endorsed candidate.

"On the other hand, I will not oppose an open primary. If the convention determines that an open primary is desirable, I will make a clean fight for the governorship. I assure the members of my party that the chances of Farmer-Labor success in the November election will in no way be jeopardized by any tactics used in my campaign. I will abide by the wishes and judgment of the rank and file from whom our party derives its strength."

Garden Valley Phone Com'y Issues Report

A splendid annual report has just been issued by the Garden Valley Telephone Co., the world's largest cooperative of its kind, which shows the earnings and expense for the year 1935, says the Bagley Farmers' Independent. The statement was made as of Feb. 1, 1936. The credit balance or actual worth of the company is computed as $330,043.41, and the statement says that the value of the stock dollar is now about $2.50, showing a gain of 11 cents for the year. The $339,043.41 shows an increase for the year in the sum of $14,656.56.

There are no notes payable now, Thomas Vollom, general manager of the company points out, as the $15 890.30 owed a year ago was all paid before Feb. 1.

Gilbert A. Brattland, one of our local citizens, was one of the four original organizers of the Garden Valley Telephone Company while he was cashier of the First State Bank of Winger which he had also organized. Mr. Brattland was its first treasurer and one of the directors. The original proposal was to build as the first beginning an eight mile line from Winger to Rindal and Inland town. Very soon it extended rapidly, the Fertile exchange being the first one acquired.

PROWLERS TAKE WARREN 26-21 IN CONSOLATION

E. GRAND FORKS CHAMPS IN A THRILLING VICTORY

Sensational Last Minute Rally Wins Title for the 'Little Green Wave'

The Lincoln High School Prowlers won the consolation title in the district tournament held at Crookston Thursday and Friday, March 5th and 6th, when they defeated Warren by a score of 25 to 21. East Grand Forks, district champions by virtue of a thrilling 19 to 17 victory over Crookston in the final game of the tournament Friday evening, will represent District 31 at the regional tournament at Bemidji, March 12 and 13.

The Prowlers lost their chance for the championship Thursday evening in their first game of the tournament when they were defeated by the strong Crookston team by a score of 34 to 22. In the consolation game between the Thief River team and their traditional rivals from Warren, the Prowlers lead early in the first quarter and maintained a slight lead throughout the game, the quarter scores being 9 to 4, 16 to 10, 20 to 13, and 25 to 21, all in the Prowlers' favor.

The championship game was the most spectacular of the tournament, reaching its climax in the last minute of play, when after a sensational last quarter during which the score for the two teams was tied, East Grand Forks scored a basket giving them the champion ship.

Loren Stadum of the Prowlers who played for the first time as center in the tournament and who scored six baskets for the Prowlers in the consolation game, won a position on the All-Star team Two players from East Grand Forks, and one each from Crookston and Warren also were selected for the All-Star team by tournament officials.

WPL PROTESTS SENDING WPA MEN TO CAMPS

The Deportation of Single Men To Transient Camps Draws Fire

An attempted wholesale deportation of single unattached WPA workers to transient camp was reported to the workmen's protective league at its meeting on Monday evening Letters have been sent out by the Detroit Lakes district office of the works progress administration informing all unattached single men working on WPA that their paycheck there will be stopped and that the only alternate to joining tht ranks of the unemployed will be for them to accept transportation on March 9 to a transient camp where they will receive $15 per month. The workmen's group adopted a strong resolution addressed to Senator Elmer A. Benson, Congressman R. T. Buckler and Governor Floyd B. Olson requesting them to use their influence to curb this inhuman, un-American proceedure and to protest against the starvation pay on WPA projects.

The organization also voted to affiliate with the Minnesota Farmer-Labor association and elected W J. Douville and W. H Quist as their representatives on the Pennington county central committee of the association. W. H. Quist was elected the organization's member of the Pennington county delegation to the state farmer-labor convention which convenes on March 27th.

The business agent was instructed to arrange for a speaker who will lecture on a subject of his own choosing and conduct an open forum at the next meeting of the league on Monday, March 23rd.

STATE ROAD AND BRIDGE FUND IS DEALT COUNTIES

State Apportions $138,000.00 More Than Was Distributed Last Year

Minnesota counties will receive approximately $138,000 more for their local roads from the state and bridge fund this year than last. The state board of allotment consisting of Highway Commissioner N W. Elsberg, State Treasurer Julius Schmahl and State Auditor Stafford King, has estimated the 1936 fund at $4,550,000 compared with $4,411,647 in 1935.

The board estimattd 1936 receipts from the state one-mill road tax at $1 050,000 and from one-third of the state gasoline tax at $3.500,000. Receipts from these two sources constitute the state's contribution toward improvement of county roads. Distribution of the funds to the individual counties is based on a percentage formula established by law. The one-mill tax funds are used on state-aid roads and the gas tax funds on county-aid roads.

Amounts allocated by the board of allotment to counties in this section are:

County	Allot. from 1-mill tax	Allot. from gas tax
Clearwater	$10,124	$26,250

Polk	10,124	85,500

PRICHARD ASKS RESTRICTION ON BEER LICENSES

Air Markings are to be Painted on Roof of the City Auditorium

STATE BOARD WARNS OF SEWAGE EVILS

Bids on Police Car are Laid Over to Friday Evening Meeting

Mayor W. W. Prichard addressing the council at its meeting on Tuesday evening suggested that the city should restrict the issuance of beer licenses, stating that too keen competition may tend to bring in bootlegging and illegal practices that the city should try to discourage. He also suggested pursuant to a request from the federal air board that the council should designate a building in the city where air route travel markings can be painted for the guidance of aviators. The council designated the city auditorium and the WPA will sponsor the painting of proper identification marking on the roof of the building.

Earl Long business agent of the workmen's protective league appeared before the council and suggested that in view of the condition of the city streets during the break-up, fifty men from his organization should be put to work cleaning up the downtown district. The suggestion was referred to the street committee.

A communication from the state board of health called attention to the poor condition of the city's sewage system and suggested that the city take steps to remedy the matter Serious effects on the city's health may be the result if these steps are not taken, the letter stated.

Refreshment license was granted to O. H. Nelson and building removal permits were granted to Leroy Favrow for the moving in of a small building which is to be used in remodeling his home and for the moving out of a barn from near the Red Lake ice house to east of the city. Northwest Station Weather Reports Shows February Coldest Month

More than usual interest centered around the weather reports issued by the Northwest Experiment Station during the past winter. This was due not only to the long period of severe weather and impassable roads, but to a number of new records established during February. The following summary, prepared by R. S. Dunham, station agronomist will consequently be of interest throughout the Red River Valley area.

For thirty-eight consecutive days, January 15 to February 21, the maximum temperature as recorded at the Northwest School did not rise to zero. For forty-five successive days, January 10 to February 23, the lowest temperature remained below zero. From November 1 to March 1, there were seventy-seven days with minimum temperatures below zero. From December 15 to March 1, the temperature did not rise above the freezing point at any time Average temperatures for the winter months were as follows:

November: 15.8 degrees as compared with 25.6 for the 5-year average.

December: 9.8 degrees as compared with 10.5 degrees for the 5-year average.

January: —9.0 degrees as compared with 4.4 degrees for the 5-year average.

February: —13.7 degrees as compared with 7.0 degrees for the 5-year average.

January 1936 was the coldest January ever recorded at the Northwest Station and February 1936 was the coldest month ever recorded. The minimum for the year was reached February 15 when thermometer sank to —51 degrees. Previous lows were —39 in 1916 and —39 in 1912.

The total snowfall up to March 1 measured 34 5 inches which when melted resulted in 2.69 inches of water. The severe cold made the snow unusually dry. Commonly 34 inches of snow would result in 3.4 inches to 4.2 inches of water. This dryness was an important factor which made blowing and drifting the difficult factor it has been this winter. Depth of snow has not been recoredd in previous years, but the amount of water in melted snow for the winter measured 3.08 inches in 1935, 3.76 inches in 1034, 3.24 inches in 1933, 3.50 inches in 1926, 8.10 inches in 1921, 4.01 inches in 1916, and 4.46 inches in 1915.

The Sons and Daughters of Norway Lecture Course will come to an end for this season with the next number on Monday evening, March 30th. The subject of the lecture is "Contributions to world history by Norway and Norwegians" and the speaker is the well-known Assistant Attorney General M. N. Orfield of St Paul. The Brage Chorus of Thief River Falls will furnish the musical part of the program.

Marshall County Man Is Lodged In County Jail After a Dogged Chase

John Melvie from near Viking was taken into custody on a car theft charge by deputy sheriff Marshall Kays of Marshall county on Tuesday evening following a four mile chase thru woods and across prairie.

Deputy Kays was returning from the east end of the county Tuesday afternoon when he came across a car in the ditch about ten miles west of this city. Upon investigation he found that he recognized the car as belonging to a Warren man and he found tracks from the car towards the woods nearby. Going to a telephone, he called Warren and was informed that the car had been stolen He called Sheriff Arthur Rambeck of this city and when he arrived the two of them set out following the tracks of the thief. They came up with him after four miles thru the snow, where he was lying completely exhausted. After a rest, he was able to navigate the four miles back to the road however, and was taken to Warren where he was lodged in the county jail.

Mayor Queen of Winnipeg Indicts System that "Debases the People"

An audience which three fourths filled the large city auditoroum was held spellbound by the quiet, dignified oratory of Mayor John Queen of Winnipeg, Friday evening.

Appearing here on the third of a series of winter lectures sponsored by the Sons and Daughters of Norway and under the auspices of the Civic and Commerce association, the executive of the Canadian metropolis speaking on "The Dangers to Our Civilization", laid down a stern indictment of the present social system of production for profit, which he said "Honors the Shylock, stones the prophets and debases the common people."

Mayor Queen was introduced by Mayor W. W. Prichard of this city, who in his introduction drew a, brief history of the "Canadian Chicago", and its growth and development. Referring in his opening remarks to the development of Winnipeg Mayor Queen said that his city like all large cities, has all the earmarks of a decadent social system, as well as the usual signs of modernity to be found in any metropolis. While we have the beautiful parks, excellent educational institutions, and other things which can make life worth while for the people, we also have 6,000 heads of families on relief. Living on a restricted diet in the same way as would be necessary in case of famine, while we in Canada like you here in the United States are troubled with a tremendous carry-over of wheat for which we can find no market, he said. After all, he said, while we have made enormous strides technically and scientifically, so that we fly thru the air and sail under the sea, we have failed in providing a method of distribution which adequately provides for the needs of the people. "A social system

Register Labor Need Early; NRS

Early orders for farm workers are urged by representatives of the National Reemployment office at Thief River Falls.

A considerable number of farm hands, tractor operators, dairy hands, chore boys, herdsmen and maids from the eight northwest counties are registered and available for employment at the two employment offices of this district maintained respectively at Crookston and Thief River Falls.

Based on the seasonal rush of orders during the past two years, employment officials solicit the cooperation of farmers to place their orders at least two or three weeks before the spring work begins. This will insure a better selection of workmen and will avoid delay in the securing of men when actually needed.

A representative of the NRS is at Thief River Falls every [illegible] from [illegible] A. M. to 5 P. M. to take orders and new applications.

ROD RIPS THRU CHEST LODGES IN MAN'S MOUTH

Hopkins.—Elof Nelson, employed in the blacksmith shop of the Minnesota State Highway department's maintenance division at Hopkins, is recovering from injuries received in a freak accident. Nelson was smoothing down a steel rod on a power driven buffer when the rod was twisted out of his hands by the speed of the buffer wheel. Entering his chest, the steel piece traveled thru his jaw and one end of it lodged in his mouth. He was given treatment at once, and will be incapacitated for only two weeks.

R. R. SNOWPLOW CLEANS AWAY DEPOT PLATFORM

Clarissa.—Evidently intent on showing Clarissa villagers just how efficient it was, a Great Northern railway snow plow not only cleared the tracks of snow recently, but in its zeal for cleaning completely shaved off 68 planks in the platform of the Clarissa depot. The plow, hitched behind a southbound freight engine, was pulling a string of cars on its way out of town when the air pressure which controls the wings of the plow gave way, letting the wings to the ground level as the plow was passing the depot. Traveling at a rate of about 10 to 15 miles per hour, the plow ripped up 68 planks for about 50 feet along the platform. The trainmen operating the plow managed to get the wing up in the air before it could hit the cinder portion of the platform, probably saving train from being thrown from the tracks.

SMALLER TREE FOUND ENCIRCLED BY LARGER

Fertile.—Nature is hard to beat, and in looking for oddities the unusual accomplishments of Mother Nature can't be ignored. A cottonwood tree on the farm of Carl J. Anderson near Fertile blew down recently, and its height of 42 feet was cut up for heating wood. In the cutting, a peculiar circumstance was discovered. The tree had not been one tree but two, for inside the green outer tree was the smaller, original one. It appears that the outside tree grew out from the last branch of the original tree, and continued growing, developing into a perfect cottonwood tree and completely covering the transplanted tree. The stump of the inside tree was eight feet tall; the outer tree 18 inches in girth. The tree had 34 distinct "rings", indicating its age, which has been established as correct by Anderson, who recalls the time the tree was transplanted.

BEGGAR HAS $120 IN CASH IN HIS POCKETS

Fergus Falls.—A stranger in a strange land, who sought and accepted alms and food from people in the Erhard neighborhood, near Fergus Falls, is in the Otter Tail county jail awaiting the disposition of immigration officials. The stranger, who says his name is Andie Helmeci, is a Hungarian and speaks but little English. He became somewhat of a nuisance by loitering around Erhard, and the village constable brought him to jail, where he is being held without charge. Helmeci is bewhiskered and about 55 years old. He is said to have readily accepted the hospitality of Erhard people, who thought he was penniless. But Helmeci objected quite vigorously when he was brought to jail and the sheriff started to go thru his pockets. There was a reason for his objections—he had $120 in cash on his person.

SNOWSHOES NINE MILES A DAY TO CARRY MAIL THRU

Detroit Lakes.—Plodding nine miles a day on snowshoes through woods and across fields, against stinging winds and in 40 below zero weather, Joe Rundlett, substitute rural mail carrier for the Detroit Lakes postoffice, has been carrying the U. S. mail through. No mercy messenger No doctor bringing aid. Nothing at all sensational. Joe Rundlett looks upon his daily routine of reaching places in Becker county closed to snowmobile and even a team of horses as "nothing unusual". He has frozen his hands and face "I guess six or seven times", but still he says the job isn't so tough "now that I'm broken in". Breaking through each day to bring mail to some forty patrons, Joe doesn't necessarily take the road. "I take the shortest route", he said, and stated that the straightest course took him through timber land and up and down hills. On his daily hike he packs a mail bag weighing over forty pounds. It was pretty heavy at first, but he doesn't mind it much now, he states.

BLOW TORCH EXPLODES; RAISES KITCHEN ROOF

Luverne.—Explosion of a blow torch which was being used to thaw out frozen water pipes caused George Reimer of Luverne to suffer painful burns on his face and hands at the Peter Wiese farm The explosion also resulted in considerable damage to the house. Its force was so great that it literally lifted the kitchen roof, besides breaking all the windows on the ground floor of the dwelling. A small blaze started, but was quickly extinguished.

IT CAN'T HAPPEN HERE

Mayor John Queen of Winnipeg, painted a rather somber picture of the world today, and the problems and dangers facing it, when he spoke here Friday evening under the auspices of the Civic and Commerce association.

Certainly there is no discounting the dangers to civilization which he pointed out, nor the evils of "a decadent social system" which he visualized so dramatically to his listeners. The deplorable phase of the situation is the fact that these dangers and evils are not local, state nor national, but international in their scope, and that therefore, although remedial measures taken by local, state or national groups can alleviate to a large degree, the dangers facing civilization, it will take concerted international efforts, to entirely remove the causes, that threaten the modern world with annihilation.

By far the greatest obstacle to progress is the determined opposition to changing the "social system that honors the Shylock, stones the prophets and debases the common people" which has been manifest in business groups generally. Not long ago, John Queen sat in prison in Manitoba for daring to say what he now says from the public platform. And his case is not at all unique. In the United States, we too, have "stoned our prophets" with reckless abandon. And this stoning has been done by the business and professional element, which has not only refused to consider remedies, but has actually refused to listen, or to admit that there are any dangers or inherent evils in the profit system. The blindness of those who refuse to see, is quite general today—except in Thief River Falls.

The writer is a member of neither the Sons of Norway lodge nor the Civic and Commerce association, and we therefore feel that we can with perfect propriety commend both groups for a splendid contribution to contemporary American history. They are not only willing to listen and to consider—they invite and sponsor educational and enlightening discussion of current national and international problems. In a community where the business and professional groups are champions of democratic institutions, the dangers which confronts the world in general are far less evident.

WHO'S LOONEY NOW?

"The growth in insanity cases has become a matter of grave concern", Dr. M. J. Mayo of the Mayo Brothers Clinic in Rochester said Thursday. "Mental stress of the times has caused most of the increase in brain ailments. It is as important to cure the economic evils which burden humanity and causes insanity as it is to apply remedies to individual cases," Dr. Mayo stated.

The good doctor's statement is disconcerting to say the least. What with the growing tolerance for people who have, what has in the past been considered looney ideas, and the prevalent custom of sending people who appear to be slightly "tetched in the haid" to the legislature, we had supposed that officially at least, insanity was on the decrease. After watching the antics of the legislature and making a heroic attempt to understand New Deal legislation we sometimes wonder if the candidates haven't been switched so we are sending them to the wrong places.

Sanity, after all, like Einstein's theory of the Universe, is relative and what appears to be bughouse to one person may appear perfectly lucid to another. In this case it may be that the doctor has his deductions inverted and that people are actually becoming more sane and therefore considered insane are being incarcerated in institutions. The more we see of this "cockeyed" world the more we are inclined to lean towards his belief. Whether this theory is right or wrong we would favor turning the tables and releasing the asylum inmates and incarcerating the rest of the people. Anyone who can live in this "hurly-burly" world without going "dippy" has earned a rest with free room and board in a nice quiet institution.

WHITHER THE PROGRESSIVE MOVEMENT?

In spite of a great deal of sentiment for a national farmer-labor party and a united front for progressive action there is little enough ground for optimism. The progressive movement like all other political movements have their share of self-seekers who will only cooperate if they may themselves dictate the course.

The lesson of two years ago evidently did not teach the non-partisan leaguers of North Dakota anything. Again this year they are divided into two hostile camps flying at each other's throats rather than to center their attack upon the enemies to progress. Divided over what? Over Langer! Over a personality; a dictatorial office-seeker and forgetting the principles which should be uppermost and foremost.

There are rumblings in the ranks of the Minnesota farmer-laborites which may or may not develop into a situation similar to that in North Dakota with the factions multiplied by a hundred. And the division will be over what? Over personalities. Over patronage. Over thwarted ambitions and political office. Not over principles. But over the machinations of would-be Masters of Destiny who would make or unmake or move their fellows around like pawns on a political chessboard.

Where will it end? We don't know. It will in a great measure depend upon the actions of the state farmer-labor convention which convenes on the 27th of this month at St. Paul. If that body insists upon rank and file control, and casts out the kingmakers wherever they me be found; if it amends the constitution so as to prohibit state employees or officeholders from sitting as members of county committees or state central committee or as delegates to the state conventions of the future; if it insists upon would-be candidates being pledged to support the program as adopted and to support the endorsed candidates. In the degree that it fails to do these things the association will find that it has lessened or outlived its usefulness as an instrument for advancing the co-operative commonwealth.

This is an appeal for harmony. This is an appeal to the ambitious ones to bear in mind that they are not essential to the advance of the progressive movement. The world will go along fine even after they are dead. This is an appeal to the kingmakers to bear in mind that the election of their pet candidate is far less important than the election of a capable man pledged to a program of production for use. This is an appeal to the rank and file, in whom the final power is vested, to bear in mind that leaders are but brighter candles that flicker and die, and are therefore not important. The cause is the issue; the united front to carry on the battle to free humanity from the chains of an accursed system that destroys manhood, debases the multitude, betrays the coming generations, murders the innocent, honors the scoundrel and kills every holy and venerable instinct that kindles in the human breast, IS essential. COOPERATE AND DEMAND COOPERATION.

THAT ONE WILL BE SEEN AROUND THE WORLD

A prominent clergyman asked us the other day if we had looked through the 1936 almanac. We admitted that we had not.

"There is something about it that is quite unusual", he said. "There will be five eclipses during the year, but only one that will be visible in the United States. Two of the sun, two of the moon and one of the democratic party."

HAS TWISTED AND TURNED

(Park Region Echo)

Arguing the justice of the Supreme Court's decision that agricultural relief is not a national problem but one for the states, the St. Paul Pioneer Press says: "Agriculture was certainly not a national question when the Constitution was written and adopted". But it was! Nine-tenths of the wealth of the new nation was in land when the Constitution was written. The writers knew little, if anything, about any other sort of industry or wealth were unheard of. Yet the Supreme Court has twisted and turned that document as the years have gone by to make it the bulwark of the control of the nation's wealth by corporations. If the men who wrote the Constitution could come back to see this nation dominated by corporations and agriculture only a hand-maiden of the trusts and monopolies, they would be completely at a loss to understand how it could have been done under the basic law that they wrote.

WHY SHOULD WILL HAYS BE CENSOR?

(From "Labor")

Sinclair Lewis says that Will H. Hays, "czar" of the motion picture industry, has told Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer that they must not film Lewis' book, "It Cannot Happen Here." Hays is alleged to have said that the book handles a controversial subject and the picture might offend Hitler and Mussolini.

The "czar" declares that Lewis' charge is "phoney," but the fact remains that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, after selecting a cast and spending $200,000, have apparently pigeon-holed Mr. Lewis' brainchild.

"Labor" is not particularly interested in Sinclair's book—it's a good enough yarn for an idle hour—but what "Labor" would like to know is why Will Hays should be permitted to censor America's moving pictures? As we recall it, Hays is the man who collected a "slush fund" which put Warren Harding in the White House in 1920 and turned the "Ohio gang" loose in Washington.

As "czar," he permitted American movies to become so rotten that the churches had to organize "Leagues of Decency" in an effort to clean out the "smut" that Hays had O. K.'d.

LIARS OF PROSPERITY

(Union Advocate)

The Liberty League is made up of big bankers, industrialists and disgruntled politicians. It is a militant organization, spending millions to discredit the New Deal, and to embarrass Mr. Roosevelt.

And yet—during the past year stocks listed on the New York stock exchange gained in value exactly $3,218,965,497. While these stocks were increasing in value the net profits of General Motors amounted to $167,226,000. United States Steel corporation had a net operating profit of $1,084,917. In 1934 the same corporation went into the red to the tune of $21,667,780. Sears, Roebuck had total sales last year 23 per cent higher than those in 1934.

Yet, in the face of these facts, the Liberty League howls against the New Deal as though it had interferred with their legitimate profits.

And while Liberty Leaguers were piling up huge surpluses and distributing bonus checks to their own kind—Labor's wage was slashed, hours were lengthened and millions walked the streets of despair in search of jobs.

It is a sad commentary on American life when 12,000,000 men are compelled to eat the bitter bread of charity while their former employers, with bank accounts bulging with wealth, howl that the country is going to hell in a hand basket and that the only thing that can save this country is another Hoover or a stuffed shirt like Al Smith.

"Patriotism: A Scoundrel's Last Refuge"

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST
In The N. Y. American of Nov. 2, 1917

The absolute truth of Dr. Johnson's declaration that "patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel" has never been more convincingly demonstrated than in the present campaign.

Every conscienceless financial pirate who has been robbing the public for years; every faithless public official who has brazenly betrayed the trust reposed in him and who has cynically served the spoilers; every political retainer of privilege-seeking interests; every subservient publisher owning stock in the very plundering corporations from which he should in honor be defending the public; every little degenerate dipsomaniac who sustains his newspaper failure on Wall Street and Downing Street subsidies; in fact, every "scoundrel", to use Dr. Johnson's plain and pointed phrase, is loudly proclaiming himself a patriot and denouncing his more honest opponents as traitors.

Such attempt to becloud the real issues and to prostitute the lofty patriotism of our people to the selfish ends of cheap demagogues and to the corrupt purposes of recognized rascals is as dangerous as it is disgraceful.

It is disgraceful because it tends to degrade the splendid spirit of loyal exaltation and devotion which ennobles our nation.

It is dangerous because it tends to sow distrust and dissention among our people at a time when all should be united as brothers in devotion to our common cause and in opposition to our common foe. Such a policy, too, is useless and resultless as it is scurrilous and scandalous.

There has already been three important elections in the United States since the last general elections in which this policy of disloyal defamation has been employed, to the due and deserved disgrace and defeat of those employing it

In New Hampshire a congressional seat made vacant by death was to be filled.

The Democrats attempted there to use the patriotic spirit of the country to their own small partisan ends.

They attempted to brand the Republicans as traitors.

They declared that a vote for the Republican candidate was a vote for the Kaiser, and as a result the Republican was elected by twice the usual Republican majority.

Later in Indiana in a similar congressional election the Democrats employed the same tactics of disloyal defamation, vituperation and misrepresentation and again the Republican candidate was elected, although a Democrat had formerly held the district for six years.

In South Dakota both Democrats and Republicans united against the independent candidate in an unpatriotic and unworthy pilicy of calumny and infamy and here the independent candidate was triumphantly elected, the Democratic and Republican candidates both rejected and their policy of disloyalty and dissention overwhelmingly repudiated.

The people of America are patriots to their innermost hearts and souls. They have consecrated themselves to a great and holy task. They are prepared to sacrifice their lives in patriotic devotion to a glorious cause and they will not allow their highest and holiest motives to be profaned, their noblest sentiments to be violated and prostituted to further the selfish objects of political partisanship. No man can mortgage the American flag or preempt the patriotism of America in his own petty purposes and whoever tries discredittably and disloyalty to do so will meet the disgraceful defeat he invites and deserves.

What Causes Inflation?

By Maynard C. Krueger

Inflation is not caused by going off the gold standard. Usually a country goes off the gold standard when it hasn't any more gold, and then inflation sometimes follows. The United States, however went off the gold standard with the vaults of the Federal Reserve Banks and the Treasury jammed with gold that wasn't being used for anything. Simply ceasing to redeem paper money in gold does not under those circumstances cause any increased spending, and does not therefore cause an inflationary rise in the general price level.

Function of Gold

In international trade the free flow of gold back and forth from one country to another was supposed to keep trade balanced between countries. Because of high tariffs, however, and because of nationalistic control over national banking systems, gold hasn't performed that function for years,—certainly not since the World War

In the domestic banking system the function of gold was not what most people supposed. The law required that there be a gold reserve of forty cents back of every dollar of Federal Reserve Notes. But that reserve had to be kept there, and not given out to the holders of Federal Reserve Notes who wanted to exchange them for gold. The purpose of that reserve was not to make the paper money redeemable, but to limit the amount of paper money that could be issued. When the United States went off the gold standard last summer, the gold reserve was so great that the circulation of paper money and credit could probably have been doubled without gold becoming scarce.

Circulation of Money

Inflation is not necessarily caused by putting more money in circulation. As a matter of fact the amount of money in circulation has increased during the depression. In 1933 it was almost twice what it was in 1929. Prices nevertheless went on down. That was a period of deflation in spite of the fact that there was a rapid increase in the amount of money in circulation.

Nothing causes inflation unless it affects the amount of spending. The amount of spending is affected by several factors. Money in circulation is only one of them. A second factor is the rate at which the money circulates,—the velocity of circulation. A dollar which passes from hand to hand fifty times in a year accounts for twice as much spending as a dollar which is used in only twenty-five purchases during the year. Thus the increase in the amount of money in circulation after 1929 was partially offset by the decrease in its velocity.

Book and Bank Credit

A more important factor, however, is the fact that normally most purchases are made with credit and not with money. Some of this credit is book credit. Some of it is instalment credit. Most of it is bank credit.

The major source of bank deposits is not the person who takes money to a bank and deposits it. Most bank deposits arise from loans made by the bank. A business man wants to finance a transaction. He explains it to his banker. If the banker agrees that there will probably be a profit in the transaction, so the loan can be repaid, he extends the loan to the business man. The business man signs a note which is then listed as one of the assets of the bank, and the amount is credited to his checking account. Other business men do the same and, by means of checks these bank deposits pass from one person to another, financing purchases just as if real money were being used instead.

But when the business man doesn't see any profit in any transactions, he doesn't need such a big checking account. So he writes a check to the bank and pays off the loan, and that much circulating credit just disappears into thin air.

Circulating Money Decreased

That is what has happened since 1929. Circulating credit decreased rapidly because many business men had no use for it because there was no profit in sight Even when the Federal Reserve Banks lowered their rediscount rates to one per cent to entice business men to borrow, they refused to do so. The profit motive was no longer able to keep business going.

The amount of circulating credit was normally more than seven times as great as the amount of circulating money. Since 1929 it has decreased about one-third. This decrease, together with the reduction in the velocity of circulation of both money and credit, far more than offset the increase in the amount of money in circulation. The fundamental cause was the breakdown of the profit system of business.

Some Radio Figures

There are over 525,000 minutes in an ordinary year Out of this number the average broadcasting station is on the air for approximately 300,000 minutes. During that time, we are treated to all kinds of propaganda, some fairly bad, some fairly rotten.

Earl Browder spoke over the Columbia network last Thursday night, for fifteen minutes, or one twenty-thousandth of the time used by capitalist propagandists during the course of the year. His subject, "The Communist Position in 1936", drew fire from Hearst and his cohorts. Congressmen rose on their hind legs in congress to denounce Earl Browder for daring to do such a thing, and suggested that it was very un-American for the Columbia Broadcasting System to allow him to speak. Free speech was not made for "foreign agitators", they said. "Browder will not stand before the Columbia microphone merely to criticize," said Hearst. "HE IS THERE TO DESTROY".

As a consequence, we had the delectable spectacle of a group of howling fascistic pickets before the main office of the C. B. S. Thursday night, whose aim was to prevent Browder's speech However C. B. S. officials outwitted them by putting Browder on the air in a sub-station, blocks removed from the scene of the "howling mob".

Browder's message was simply to form a national Farmer-Labor party by means of a united front of all radical and progressive groups, and put over some much-needed legislation. We have nothing to hope for from either the Republicans or the Democrats, he said. He called for support of the Frazier-Lundeen bill for social insurance and other measures aimed at helping the large masses of people. The Communist Party is ready, he said, to aid in the united front to gain these ends.

Small wonder that Hearst, et al, objected to the deliverance of such a message. If carried out, the program suggested by Browder would do away with the class that fattens on an unemployed and relief-ridden country.

Another Meritorious Bill

The American Youth Act, introduced in Congress by Rep. Amlie of Wisconsin and Senator Benson of Minnesota, will come up for hearing before a Senate committee March 19 to 21. This act first drawn up by the American Youth Congress, asks for a guaranteed wage for all youth who wish to learn some trade or profession; $15 to $25 a month for those going to school and $60 for those who are able to work full time.

This act, if passed and enforced, would allow a youth to enter any trade or profession he chose, as an apprentice. One of the tragedies of our modern age is the lack of opportunity for learning a trade. The idleness of a man who knows how to do nothing is more terrible in some respects, than the unemployment of a one-time worker Such marvelous talents going to waste! The Amlie-Benson bill would help wipe ou this blot on our advanced civilization.

The Building Service Strike in New York

More and more building service employees are joining the huge strike now in progress in New York City, bringing the total number of strikers up to 78,000, with prospects of 10,000 more joining in the near future. Office buildings and apartment houses are practially paralyzed, with all elevator boys and girls, switchboard operators, scrubwomen, janitors, and chambermaids out on the streets demonstrating and picketing. Their demands are simple: a 48 hour week, a $2 blanket increase in wages (existing wages are $13 to $20 per week), time and a half for overtime, the union shop and recognition of union delegates, and a scale of $22 to $26 per week for elevator men in skyscrapers.

The general average wage for elevator operators has been $13 to $16 for a 60 to 90 hour week, with a free apartment—in the basement. On the other hand rent has been on the up-and-up in New York, and building corporations are making money fast. So there is small wonder that a strike would occur; the union seems to be a close-knit organization, and stands a good chance to get some of its demands.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelson

So frenziedly are the Republican leaders dashing about the country, making political speeches here and political speeches there, that this commentator is beginning to wonder, in a mild sort of way whether they've all, somehow, become infected with the hoof and mouth disease.

* * * *

But this much, at least, one suspects . . . That all these bright lads — Landon, Borah, Vandenberg, Knox, Dickinson, and others — each of whom, fervently hopes in secret that it was his particular mother who raised her son to be president, are slyly fishing about for some fatal flaw in the New Deal which might be seized upon as a point around which the voters may be induced to rally to the Republican cause.

* * * *

The ambitious Republican gentle men are, however, finding this something of a chore; for the populace has not, so far shown itself to be particularly flaw-minded. Indeed, its only response to the salvos of Republican oratory has consisted chiefly of a polite and somewhat bored lifting of the eyebrows.

* * * *

One of the first points of attack was the Constitution. The New Deal is out to destroy it completely! . . .

This scare was used in 1924 to defeat LaFollette, and the political gentleman doubtless reasoned that since it worked so well then, it should work now . . .

After all, John Citizen isn't very bright. On that, there is probably tacit agreement among the various candidates. He believed once, and he can probably be made to believe again that the moon is made of green cheese!

But, surprisedly, the populace showed a distressing lack of interest. For, unfortunately, such a large proportion of the people were adversely affected by the NRA and AAA decisions that they've come to feel that there may be times when a little less constitutionality might not be entirely amiss. They are not quite so likely as they were to hold their breath in reverent awe when it is mentioned.

So the Republican leaders were obliged to shake their heads in doleful disappointment. As a campaign issue the Constitution seemed to have no more life than a dead herring.

* * * *

The Republican High Command then had a brilliant inspiration . . The idea that radio broadcasts caricaturing the New Deal might do the trick. Someone may have reminded them of the program of relentless and sustained newspaper ridicule which all but annihilated Magnus Johnson some years back.

Anyway, they tried it. But it fell utterly flat. When the Republicans turned their entertainment gem loose on the ether, John Citizen merely yawned indifferently and spun the radio dial to 'Amos 'n Andy'.

With a sad sigh, the High Command was compelled to punch the 'No Sale' key on the register.

* * * *

They turned then, to the AAA as convincing proof of the utter incompetence of the New Dealers and their unfitness to be in office. It was by reason of Mr. Roosevelt's AAA, they proclaimed, that, the consumer was compelled to pay such high prices for his vittles.

But the Supreme Court in its infinite wisdom found the AAA unconstitutional . . . which, by and large, pleased the city dwellers of humble means; for now, of course, prices would come tumbling down.

But, miraculously, prices stayed where they were . . . or even climbed a little. And were Republican faces red!

Again, with weary headshake, the 'No Sale' key had to be punched.

* * * *

There are many other phases of the New Deal which have been tested or are still to be tested as possible campaign issues. It is fervently hoped that sooner or later, one will be found which will awaken the apathetic citizenry to its sublime duty to vote the Democrats out and vote the Republicans in . . .

Which is, after all, the crux of the whole matter!

In The Editors Mail Bag

Mr. R. M. Aalbu,
Editor, Forum,
Thief River Falls, Minnesota.
Dear Mr Aalbu:

When a great people is facing a great decision, any citizen may properly consider how that decision can best be made. That is the purpose of this letter.

Either the American people will re-elect the present National Administration next November or they will not. If they do re-elect it, it will be because the Republican Party fails to offer something the people believe is likely to be better for them.

Some Republicans contend that the people have already made their decision, and that the Republican Party can elect any candidate for President it chooses to put up. I question that view.

Others believe that the American people are still on the fence, and that to win will take the best brains and the best candidate the Republican Party can supply. That view appeals to me.

There are not enough regular Republicans or regular Democrats to elect a President. Franklin Roosevelt owed his victory to progressive Republicans and Independents. Some of these voters supported him because they were disgusted with the Old Deal, some because they believed in the New Deal. They held the balance of power then and they hold it now.

To win, the Republican Party must get these progressive voters back. It cannot get them back by offering them in 1936 the sort of thing that drove them away in 1932.

Since '32 the Nation's thinking has progressed. Today the rights of men, women and children to protection and security in their daily lives are more widely acknowledged than they ever were before. Millions of people have been given recognition and assistance they never knew before. To take account of those who need help and deserve it is not only expedient but right.

A Republican Congressman whom I know recently said to a friend of mine who was standing up for social security: "If that's the way you feel about it, you can't belong to my Party."

The Republican Party cannot win this election by practicing exclusiveness. That was how it lost Pennsylvania in 1934. Neither can it win merely by abusing the New Deal. The Republican Party must offer a real man and a real platform. You cannot beat something with nothing.

It is not the purpose of this letter to suggest either a candidate or a platform. But I want to point out that the people are looking not backward but ahead. If forward looking voters should fail to find what they expect in the Republican candidate and the Republican platform, it will be no wonder if they turn elsewhere.

Therefore, to nominate any candidate who is reactionary, who smacks of Wall Street, or who can fairly be suspected of being the choice of the financial district of New York, would simply be asking for defeat. And defeat of the National ticket would carry down not only National candidates, but multitudes of local candidates also.

There is a way, however, in which this election can be won. That way is to keep in mind the millions of men and women whose votes carried the last National election and will carry the next.

To win, the Republican Party must offer the reliable promise of an administration sincerely and effectively devoted to the greatest good of the greatest number, honestly bound to the welfare of the plain people, and earnestly determined to make the public good come first. You can't do that except with a candidate whose record guarantees his pledge.

Sincerely yours
GIFFORD PINCHOT

Weekly Congressional Review

By Harold C. Hagen

Washington, D C.—The bill to amend the Clayton Anti-Trust Act by curbing quality discounts, advertising allowances and brokerage, known variously as the "anti-chain store" and the "fair trade" bill, has become a burning issue in Congress.

A torrent of mail and telegrams on both sides, plus interviews held last week with Congressmen by about 1500 independent retailers and wholesalers who support the bill, emphasized the importance of the measure to the business and political worlds.

The "little fellows", whose mass meeting here was inaugurated by the U. S. Wholesale Grocers Association, and supported by retail and brokers' trade associations put up the plea that mass-buying is shoving them to the wall.

The independents blame these conditions on the discounts and allowances which the chain systems obtain from manufacturers. They advance the Robinson-Patman bill to stop such practices when found discriminatory or monopolistic by the Federal Trade Commission.

Congressman Buckler of the 9th District and the other Minnesota Representatives had a conference with officials of the organized independent retail groups of Minnesota.

AAA Rental and Benefit Payments for 1935 Totaled $580 821,074

Rental and benefit payments to farmers cooperating in seven adjustment programs during the calendar year 1935 totaled $580,821,074.38, according to a report issued by the Comptroller of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

The payments included $108,874,715.50 to wheat farmers; $237,872,609.06 to corn-hog farmers; $57,032,852.90 to sugar producers. Minnesota's share was $32,817,104.00

Emergency Loan Available

Offers Mower and Binder Repair Bulletin

A natural-born mechanic may know instinctively how to repair mowers and binders but anyone can find out how in a new bulletin. "Care and Repair of Mowers and Binders" just issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. It is Farmers Bulletin 1754-F and is well illustrated with working drawings. It may be secured free by writing Congressman Buckler's office.

Notes at Random

The open market values of 1,322,819,505 shares listed on the New York Exchange recorded another $1,000,000,000 gain in February to reach the highest total value since April 1931, at $51,201,637,902, it was disclosed by the exchange's monthly compilation.

Highways, farm-to-market roads streets and public buildings, both governmental and educational, account for 49.5 of the total money to be spent for WPA projects in Minnesota. An additional 34.4 per cent will be spent for housing parks, and playgrounds, flood control and other conservation, water supply and sewer systems, electric utilities and transportation.

The money crowd of New York have apparently decided that Alf M. Landon of Kansas is a satisfactory foil for their attempt to wrest President Roosevelt's home state from his grasp, break away other eastern states and recapture enough of the once Republican West to beat Roosevelt in November. Among Landon's backers are Multi-millionaire Ogden L. Mills, former Secretary of the Treasury and one-time Man Friday for Herbert Hoover. Of course Landon can't help who wants to back him.

There has been a 32 percent drop in Marriages in the U. S. since 1932.

The Treasury wound up its seventh month of the present fiscal year with a $30,516,452,985 public debt on January 31, an increase of $1,815,560,361 since last July 1.

A Sound Loan

and its benefits

Every commercial banking loan made with a judicious eye to its effect on the community as a whole, is a step toward recovery.

Because the officers, employees and stockholders of this bank have a keen interest in the future of this community, we take steps to be sure that everyone who borrows here can do so to advantage. Extending credit for a purpose which is destined to lose money for the borrower is neither good friendship nor good business, and it is not part of our policy.

But whenever the conditions are sound and promising, we have ample resources to lend at moderate rates.

Why Newspapers Ask for "Early Copy"

An advertiser is unfair to himself when he sends his advertisement to the newspaper office just before the deadline.

The late copy problem is a bane of many publishers, as some merchants persist in postponing preparation of copy until the last hour and the publisher has to worry about unnecessary overtime and hasty workmanship. The publisher often fears to push the merchant lest he offend him and thereby lose the ad.

HERE ARE THE PROS AND CONS:

EARLY COPY	LATE COPY
1. No Errors.	1. Risk of typographical Error.
2. Time for Corrections.	2. No Opportunity for Corrections.
3. Good Typography.	3. Risk of poor Typography.
4. Prompt Delivery to Readers.	4. Most "late copy" is "slapped up" to use an Office Term.
5. Fair to Mechanical Staff.	5. Risk of late Delivery to Readers.
6. Advertisements well written.	6. Unfair physical and mental Strain.
7. Illustrations correct.	7. Advertisements hurriedly written.
8. Better Positions.	8. Risk of misplaced Cuts.

While the Forum is an example of mechanical efficiency, there are limits on what can be done by a given force of printers, sterotypers, and pressmen in a short crowded period of stress. There is plenty of time to give each advertiser good service when early copy is sent in.

Visitors to the mechanical department are invited so that the process of handling advertising may be thoroughly understood and the mechanical problems fully realized. Your cooperation will be greatly appreciated by the entire personnel of the Tri-County Forum.

Let Our Motto Be

GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

STREAMLINE HEALTH

Streamline construction of automobiles, railway locomotives and trains is becoming so common now that streamline seems to be a fixed word in the language. Streamline construction is associated with speed, convenience and comfort; in other words, with increased efficiency.

Have you ever stopped to consider that, due to the efforts of your public health officials, you have more efficient health than your grandfathers had, or that your father had in his youth? You really have streamlike health. You can work harder for more years of your life than your forefathers did.

In 1835 the span of life expectancy was only 30 years; today, 1935, it is approximately increased exactly 100 per cent.

We take it so for granted today that a large city is a healthy place in which to live that it is difficult to think back to the 1780-1830 half century when London was changing from virtually a village to the first great industrial center of modern times. That half century was the beginning of the machine age.

And that beginning took a tremendous toll of life. The country population flocked into London to get the pittance of the machine, but as soon as they came they died. The crowded squalid living conditions and the long dark hours were too hard. Though the influx was constant, it was not enough to balance the rapid death rate. An authority of that time made the statement in 1800 that the death rate was in proportion to the density of the population. He said he had observed that the more people were congregated together in cities, the higher was the death toll.

If this condition had continued to be true—during the one hundred and thirty-five years since that time, I doubt if we would have any cities of over 10,000 population.

But we have made vast progress in safeguarding health. The health controlling agencies have made it possible to keep healthy as many people as the architects and engineers can concentrate in any given area. Indeed, the present-day death rate in large cities is as low if not lower than in sparsely populated rural communities.

It is not only doctors that are in charge of this public health service. There are many other highly educated, well-trained men and women responsible for a large part of the success of the work.

First there are the sanitary engineers who are employed in the practical application of the principles of sanitary science, such as safeguarding our drinking water. This requires a knowledge of the biological life in streams and rivers, and of stream pollution with human and animal excreta and with industrial wastes. Mosquito control also comes in this department, and the engineers must know about the life and breeding habits of mosquitoes, and must be able to identify the various mosquito races so as to distinguish those which carry malaria, yellow fever and dengue fever. These matters are only part of their duties.

If you could peep into the department of vital statistics of your state health offices, you might wonder what the mathematicians you saw there would have to do with health. They seem to be keeping books, but the books are those nearest to St. Peter. You and I are on their books. They make two records for each of us: our entrance into this world and our exit from it. They calculate death rates and by mathematical deductions they know how many people should die in 1935 from any given disease.

The department of communicable diseases is made up of doctors who have specialized in this field. Then there are laboratories in which there are many persons trained in bacteriology, serology and chemistry. They make tests and analyses of all sorts. In brief, every matter connected with public health in any way comes under the supervision of your state department of public health.

It is due to this supervision that we no longer fear typhoid fever, cholera or other epidemic diseases.

But while we have made enormous strides in public health, most of them in the last hundred years, we public health officials are far from satisfied. We want the public health to be much better than it is. We want, for instance, to wipe diphtheria off the face of the earth. We have the knowledge to do it now, and if every parent in the country would co-operate, we could accomplish it. Likewise we could be free of tuberculosis.

25th Anniversary Celebration
Our Three-Day Program--March 19, 20 & 21

Next week we celebrate.

Beginning next Thursday, March 19, we start our program in the forenoon with different demonstrations including, Hammer Mills, Roughage Mills and other demonstrations.

There will be experts in charge of tractors, trucks, automobiles, cream separators, tillage tools and the different machines. These machines will be placed in different parts of the building and some of them outside. Anyone interested in tractors or other machines will find service men and factory men in charge ready to explain in detail. Some of it much like our old tractor school.

Talking, Moving Pictures

The basement of our new building will be arranged for a show room. Talking moving pictures will be presented with liberal seating arrangements. Some of the pictures will be shown in the forenoon of each day, between the hours of 9 and 10 A. M. The balance of the forenoon will be devoted to demonstrations as above stated.

It will be impossible for us to serve lunch at noon this year owing to the Automobile Show and our own program. The crowd will be impossible to handle But we will serve lunch on the last day of our program and even though we must omit the noon-day luncheon, we are going to try hard to make it worth while just the same.

The afternoon session will start at 1:30 sharp with a speaking program which we believe will prove of interest to our visitors.

Following the short speaking program we will show more moving pictures. These pictures are of a high quality. There will be shown such as the "Building of the Boulder Dam" "Century of Progress", "World's Fair", "Moving Scenes of the Growing Making and Moving of Rubber Goods", "The Progress of the Use of Phosphate and Commercial Fertilizer". Many comic pictures will also be included.

FRIDAY, MARCH 20

Friday, March 20 will be much the same arrangement as the first day, only there will be different speakers and different pictures. All told we have made arrangements for more than 15 hours of talking, moving pictures. So there will be pictures shown each forenoon from 9 A. M. to 10 A. M. and the speaking program each day will start at 1:30 sharp followed by moving pictures.

SATURDAY, MARCH 21

Saturday, March 21 is our big celebration day, our Twenty-fifth Anniversary in business. The regular program will not start until 1:30 in the afternoon. But we hope to have many visitors in the forenoon just the same, and there will be many features of entertainment, including moving pictures Saturday forenoon as well

At about 1:15 P. M. the band will play in front of our building and the program is on. The Saturday program will take place in our show-room.

First, a short and simple dedication ceremony of our new building. This will be conducted by the Rev. E. A. Cooke J B. Smith and George B. Peterson. Then we will have more band music. Following the band selections Superintendent Morris Bye will take charge as presiding officer. Some of the speakers who will take part in the program are: Mayor Prichard and Senator Tungseth. At the close of the speaking program we will serve lunch

A hearty welcome is extended to all. A simple souvenir cane will be given away at the close of the program. "The cane you get, the cane you walk away with."

SPECIAL 10 PERCENT DISCOUNT—As a matter of good will to our trade in the celebration of our twenty-fifth anniversary, we will give a special 10 percent cash discount on all orders placed for farm machines and tractors during our celebration. Where no trade-in and such orders are settled and paid by April 15th.

This practically means for the 19th and 20th, because there will be little or no time for orders on the 21st our Anniversary Day.

"Had you been used to canoeing," Garth said, "we need not have lost all this time. But you'll get enough drenchings later on. Wring out the blanket and fetch the meat."

He launched the canoe again, unaided, and directed the others to their places. All had to kneel, facing the narrower prow of the double-stemmed craft. First came Huxby, with his wolfskin treasure bag for knee-pad. Lilith knelt on the front part of the lengthwise folded blanket. Her father had the end of the blanket behind her. At the wobble of the unsteady craft, he squatted back on his heels and clutched the gunwales.

The others held to willow branches while Garth loaded in the meat behind his own place. He stepped aboard and began to paddle with a steady stroke that sent the canoe gliding out into the swamp stream.

A paddle lay beside each of the others. Lilith was first to dip hers overside. At a murmured word from her, Huxby followed suit. Both of them had done a bit of amateur canoeing at the fashionable beaches. They were able to start in at once and help a little. But two days passed before Mr. Ramill gained enough balance and assurance to rise on his knees and try stroking his paddle.

Even after this, Garth had to bear the brunt of the heavy work. Much of the time the others were forced to stop off, to get the cramp out of their knees or rest their arms.

Had work been the only consideration, he would as soon have done it all. There were, however, reasons for more speed than he could make alone with the heavily loaded skin-covered craft. The summer was now far along. The days were rapidly shortening, the nights becoming colder and darker.

Delay would mean a serious chance of being caught in early autumn blizzards. Even Lilith Ramill might not be able to survive an all-day drive of sleet. Such a storm would undoubtedly kill her father and, not improbably, Huxby also. Persistent use of the paddles would continue the toughening of the three chechahcos.

On the third day Lilith attempted to keep stroke with him. She paddled until so exhausted that she broke down and wept.

They had twice camped on muskeg. The third afternoon brought them to broken ridges where the stream dashed through a gorge. So far as could be seen, the rapids looked easy to shoot. But Garth said it was a portage.

He slung a pack from his tumpline and took the canoe on his shoulders. The total load was a full two hundred and fifty pounds. At sight of it, the others took on all the rest of the meat and equipment. For miles Garth led them up and down rocky slopes, through brush and bogs. Twice they skirted sheer falls that showed why he had taken to land.

At last, below the lower fall, he launched the canoe in the eddy of a deep pool. The others sank down on the bank, outspent. He built a fire and boiled tea for them. They expected to camp overnight. He ordered them back into the canoe.

"Can't chance waiting here. May be too foggy to see tomorrow," he explained. "Sit flat in the bottom, and keep your paddles inboard."

They understood when a few strokes of his paddle brought the canoe to the foot of the pool. For a long two miles they crouched low in the bottom while the frail craft glanced down the foaming, swirling torrent of white water.

At the foot of the rapids, he headed it alongside a bit of gravelly beach and helped Mr. Ramill and Lilith ashore. When he remarked that there was gold in the gravel, Huxby nearly upset the canoe in his haste to get out and look.

"Gold! Why didn't we bring the gold pan?"

Garth laughed and stretched out on the dry grass above the gravel. "Gallant gentleman, your lady is building the fire."

"Don't mind him, Vivian," Lilith chimed in on the banter. "You can use the cup for panning. I need only the pot to boil Alan's tea."

Huxby glanced sidelong at Garth and hastened to help the girl. Her father had flattened out beside Garth. With a yawn, Garth stretched up his arms and let them fall. The left one came down across the millionaire's body. The back of the hand felt a lump under the leather coat. Huxby had not again gained possession of the pistol.

The chechahcos had now experienced the different phases of canoeing—days of paddling through muskeg, a portage, and the running of rapids. But all proved to be no more than a mild sample of the difficulties and hardships that followed. In the next two weeks three more rapids had to be shot and two very hard portages made. Between times, the canoe was paddled interminably through meandering channels that twisted and looped and split off in blind leads.

Down in the lower country, the pests of black gnats, mosquitoes and stinging flies became worse. At the same time the flask of grease and pitch dope began to give out. Most of the camps were on wet ground. For days the party were drenched by a steady drizzle, varied only by downpours that kept Lilith and her father bailing the canoe.

Several times fog on the water compelled Garth to put ashore. Without sight, even his training could not enable him to follow the right channel. He was not an Indian. But between the forced halts, he put in still longer hours of paddling.

Matters were coming to a pinch. After the first wetting by the rain, what remained of the meat spoiled. It became so flyblown and tainted that Lilith threw it away before Garth could prevent the wastage. He decided to give them all another lesson.

In the fast that followed, Mr. Ramill was the first to fall. Huxby came next; Lilith last of the three. By the third day they had given up all paddling. On the fourth, they lay slumped in the bottom of the canoe. Garth only tightened his belt again and dipped his paddle in his strong, steady, seemingly tireless stroke.

Whenever he found himself nearing his limit, he headed ashore, boiled tea, slept, and then put off again. The fifth day began to draw on the last reserve of his wiry endurance. Towards noon he made the boggy shore, almost outspent. He dragged out the wolfskin knapsack anchor, with its load of platinum alloy. The girl and the two men lay in a stupor of starvation. He himself was so tired that he could not have lifted even Lilith ashore.

As he rested on the wet sedges he recalled the place as one of his former camp sites. A spruce-covered ridge of higher ground here thrust out into the muskeg. The first remembrance brought another. The second gave him strength to pull his rifle from the canoe and climb aslant the ridge end. There was a berry patch on the east slope. The fruit would be better than nothing. He hoped, however, for something more.

Circling to get the wind in his face, he crept through the spruce thickets until he could peer out on the open ground of the berry patch. Luck was with him. The old black bear had gone off and left her cub. He rested the rifle barrel on a spruce branch to get sure aim.

That was the end of famine. Gorged upon the fat, tender meat of the bear cub, even Mr. Ramill rapidly regained strength. He was still rather weak, however, when they came to the last portage.

The approach to solid ground was across a narrow belt of muskeg. Near the far side of the swamp, the millionaire failed to jump squarely upon a tussock of niggerhead grass. He slipped and plunged headfirst into a pool.

Huxby was following close behind, alert for every move of his partner. He sprang to grasp the feet of the sinking man. A heave dragged him out, slimed and spluttering. Huxby worked over him, scraping off mud, until Lilith hastened back to help assist her father across the rest of the quagmire. Once on firm ground, the millionaire joked about his mishap.

"Haven't had a bath since the last rain," he said. "This one is higher class—equal to the mud baths at Hot Springs. How about my pack Lilith?"

She looked in his foxskin bag. "Everything there, Dad—with some mud added."

Garth had been too far ahead, with his heavy pack and canoe, to see or hear the accident. Mr. Ramill joked again about his extra bath when they took to the canoe at the far side of the portage. But all the time until they reached the evening camp and he started to wash the mud from the leather coat, he did not notice that the pistol was missing.

At the announcement of the loss, Huxby met Garth's gaze with a stare of cold hostility. Garth walked up to him, empty-handed.

"If you've done what I think you have," he said, "I call you for a show-down."

The engineer's lips tightened in an ironical smile. He put up his hands. Not to be fooled by the seeming bluff, Garth went over Huxby's tattered clothes, from coat collar to moccasins. The pistol was nowhere on the engineer.

"This is one time I'm due to apologize," Garth admitted.

"I accept no apology from you," Huxby replied.

Lilith looked from one to the other, her own lips tightened.

CHAPTER VII

The Gaffed Wolf.

MR. RAMILL'S good-humor over his fall into the muskeg pool had not been forced. It was based upon his feeling of physical well-being.

Instead of having been broken down by the hard toil and exposure of the trip and that severe lesson in the meaning of famine, he had come through it all in even better shape than before the start from the lost valley. The days of starvation had completed Nature's raid upon the degenerate fats and poisons of his once obese body.

There had followed the feasts of tender bear-cub meat. He was again putting on weight, but it was hard muscle.

He was paddling as vigorously if not as skillfully as his daughter, when, mid-morning of the twenty-fourth day from the valley, the canoe neared a wooded point that rose well above the swamps. Garth called out from the stern of the canoe:

"If you want a surprise, friends, shut your eyes while we take 10 strokes."

He knew that Huxby would keep on staring ahead. But he guessed right about Lilith and her father. At the end of the tenth stroke, the girl flung up her paddle and uttered a shriek of joyous amazement:

"The river! The river!"

Close upon the cry came the deep-lunged shout of her father: "By the Almighty, you've done it, Garth! We're out."

Huxby continued to stare fixedly ahead at the mighty flood of the Mackenzie. He was the last to speak: "Out of the muskegs; but a long way from out of this d—d North!"

CO-OPS ARE UNITED IN FEDERATION IN CLEARWATER COUNTY

Bagley, Minn.,—A county-wide federation of the cooperative organizations in Clearwater county was formed here recently at a meeting attended by more than 50 cooperative leaders.

A. M. Duncan of Bagley was elected temporary chairman and J. Dee Ellis acted as temporary secretary.

V. S. Peterson of Lake Elmo, a cooperative leader, who is associated with the American Farmers Mutual Automobile Insurance company, was the principal speaker at the meeting

Tells of Co-op Group

Mr. Peterson told about the Range Cooperative federation, composed of 13 cooperative stores on the Iron Range near Virginia. This federation is operating a cooperative creamery, an oil association, a trucking association, a sausage factory and is now planning to form a cooperative lumber retailing association. It is thru the formation of these federations that cooperation is advanced steadily, to serve a known demand by the members, he pointed out.

Money, the speaker pointed out is created by two factors, natural resources, plus human labor. Under the present system in America where a comparatively small number of large corporations control all labor, the worker is exploited and the return from his labor is far too small.

For Better Education

"The cooperative movement," he warned, "will not get far until we control our own money!" This, he said, is being steadily accomplished as the movement grows, but there is need for better educational method through which the full results of cooperation may be brought home to more persons.

CO-OPS SAVE QUARTER MILLION

Seattle, Wash.—Grange Supply units and cooperative stores affiliated with the Grange Cooperative Wholesale did a non-profit business of more than $3 000,000 in 1935, saving members of co-ops in Oregon, Washington and Idaho more than a quarter of a million dollars, according to the report made by Manager W. O. Dickinson, to the directors of the cooperative wholesale at its annual meeting. This represented an increase of 40 per cent over the cooperative business of the previous year.

Twenty-one new cooperatives organized in the three Northwestern states during the year affiliated with the Grange Cooperative Wholesale, bringing the total number of affiliated organizations to 64. Total assets of the supply units and stores are more than half a million dollars. For each $10 membership fee an average of approximately $50 was returned in patronage dividends or voted to reserves for further expansion of the activities of the cooperative.

MILLE LACS COUNTY CO-OP PROFIT $36,280

The Cooperative Oil association of Mille Lacs county did a gross business of $127,459 during 1935. The cost of sales amounted to $91,179, leaving a gross profit of $36,280.

The sales of the association have increased with each succeeding year. Patronage dividends have been paid each year, and these have risen from $2,084 in 1931 to $12,044 in 1935.

The association employs 11 persons: P. C. Van Someron of Princeton is manager of the organization. The following persons are also employed by the company: Gertrude G. Pearson, Princeton, bookkeeper; Max Gamradt, Princeton bulk salesman; Ray Kornmann, Milaca, bulk salesman; H. R. Swanson, station attendant; Arthur Rust, Princeton, station attendant; James Burroughs, Princeton station attendant; Lawrence Helman, Milaca, sub-station manager; Carl Peterson, Milaca, service station attendant; Maurice Quale, Onamia, sub-station manager, and Lawrence Quale, Onamia service station attendant.

The company owns and operates stations at Princeton, Milaca and Onamia, and in addition has pumps at Pease, Rock, Foley, Santiago, Glendorado, Wyanette and Carmody.

CO-OPS IN POLITICS

Those who contend that political action is undesirable for co-operative organizations find diminishing support in the British Co-operative movement which is "up to the neck" in politics in defense of its economic institutions, says a recent dispatch from Manchester.

In October, 1935, there were 490 co-operative societies affiliated with the Co-operative party, with a membership of 4,880,000, and final figures for 1935 will show about 500 societies with more than 5,000 000 members. This is greater than the membership of any other political party.

Penal laws against co-operators enacted by the national government have intensified the political consciousness of co-operators, and the Co-operative party runs its own candidates in some cases and in others has endorsed Labor party candidates. The Co-operative party and the Labor party are close allies. Whole societies join the Co-operative party, definitely linking up economic and political action.

All sections of the co-operative movement are actively fighting the growing menace of Fascism.

Complete Oil Deal

The South Dakota section of the Farmers Union reports that it has completed arrangements with the Farmers Union Central Exchange so that co-op oil can be distributed more widely and throughout South Dakota.

The new Farmers Union oil-blending plant in South St. Paul is supplying the oil in steel barrels for storage in the newly leased warehouse in Sioux Falls, S. D. Special freight rates have been arranged which make it possible to ship the barrels from the Twin Cities as cheaply as in tank cars.

The Sioux Falls warehouse keeps on hand a full line of Farmer Union oils and greases for distribution throughout the state. M. Henry Helgerson is the manager.

This new development lines up the buying power of the members of the South Dakota Farmers Union along with the membership of North Dakota, Montana, Minnesota and Wisconsin. This makes possible important savings all around.

CITY CONSUMERS GET CO-OP IDEA

Falling incomes and "excessive profit-taking by monopolistic businesses" are credited with the organization of consumers' cooperatives in 16 major American cities in the last three years.

Co-operative buying clubs, stores, oil stations, milk routes, cleaning and pressing establishments restaurants, and housing projects are now operating successfully in urban centers. Consumers' co-operatives have been organized in New York, Chicago, Gary, Kansas City, Madison, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Hollywood.

Benson —By a strange quirk of international law, Benson has a true "man without a country." His case is one of four that have been called to the attention of immigration officials in the entire United States. Chet Houde, 28, now a resident of Benson, was born in Benson but moved with his parents to Canada to live in 1911. In 1917 his father took out Canadian citizenship papers, which automatically made Chet a Canadian naturalized citizen. When he returned to Benson in 1926, a lad of 17, the immigration authorities at Portal, N. D., allowed him to pass into this country showing him to be a Canadian. Houde became of age in this country and later tried to go back to Canada but the Cannuck officials refused to allow him to enter under the status quo. In 1932 he attempted to untangle the matter and take out American citizenship papers. Again he was balked. He had no passport to show he'd entered the U. S. legally. Meanwhile he had lived in America long enough to lose his Canadian citizenship. Now he can't vote here or in Canada, and is literally without a country. The only consolation seems to be that they can't collect his income tax!

TURKEY EXPERT OUTLINES BEST CULTURE RULES

Turkey Growing Offer Good Opportunity is Careful Methods Are Used

Modern methods of turkey production were discussed by Dr. W. A. Billings, Extension Turkey Specialist at meetings held at various points in the county on Thursday and Friday of last week.

For a number of years it was possible to grow turkeys on open range with a fair degree of success, but with an ever growing disease problem, the importance of raising turkeys under confinement on clean ground away from chickens cannot be overemphasized, says Dr. Billings. Not only should turkeys and chickens be kept well separated, but turkey range should be rotated over a period of three years or more to cut down disease losses.

Although there is every reason to believe that production will be greater and prices lower this year than last, turkey growing will offer an attractive opportunity to growers that will keep costs down by studying their problems, and employing approved methods.

A general plan for turkey production including care of breeding stock, incubation, brooding and rearing of poults was outlined by Dr. Billings.

Mayor Queen Indicts Present System which does not provide for the good of the people, has outlived its usefulness and should be replaced. "The danger to civilization lies in the fact that we do not so altar the social system before the people turn to revolution and bloodshed wherein civilization will be destroyed and lost in chaos, like other civilizations that have gone before.

Calling attention to the displacements of human workers by the development of the machine he stated that there will be no more "prosperity" under the present system. Countries are in competition with other countries for foreign markets that do not exist in which to dispose of [illegible] that their own people do not have the purchasing power to absorb and deadly wars are in the offing where "we threaten to obliterate ourselves because we have not learned to distribute the wealth we are so well able to produce", he said.

Describing the horrors of the next war, which he said will not be a war between armies but a war of extermination against civilian populations he addressed the mother saying: "You mothers, who went down to the gates of death for that boy. You nursed him; you taught him; you sat up with him those long nights when he was sick; you brought him up and raised him to manhood. Did you raise him for that? For destruction?

Appearing here with Mayor Queen was Mr Lawrence, a member of the Manitoba legislature, who spoke briefly at the opening of the program and Bjorn Balchen, Winnipeg bariton soloist who rendered several solos as well as leading "My Country 'Tis of Thee" at the opening and "God Save the King" at the close of the program. Mr. Balchen is a fine singer and his renditions were well received. He responded with encore numbers. He was accompanied at the piano by Mrs Harrison of this city.

cost of $800. Leroy Favrow was granted a building permit covering remodeling at an estimated cost of $75. An application for a building permit received from A. J. Brodin covering the construction of a combination garage and shop was laid on the table until it can be investigated. The building would be constructed near the new parkway and the question of whether or not it would be desirable to have this type of building constructed near the parkway was raised.

Bond of the Thief River Falls Times as official paper was approved in the sum of $1,000. Two ordinances; one covering amendment to the fire zoning ordinance and the other covering proposed licensing of taxis were given their second reading.

The mayor sent a message vetoing a resolution granting tax abatement on a corner property, Horace and Fourth Street, on the ground that the resolution would cut the paving taxes to less than the principal, which would not be good business judgment. The council laid consideration of the veto over until an adjourned meeting to be held on Friday evening.

Opening of bids on a police car disclosed proposals as follows: Lund and Tunberg, Ford, $664; Northern Chev. company, Chevrolet, $655; Borchert and Johnson, Plymouth, $676; Thronson Motor company, Pontiac, $819; Weiner Top and Body Works Buick, $1028; Taxeraas Motor company, Terraplane, $753; Plymouth, $676; Gustafson and Son, Plymouth, $676 and LaFayette $755; with special equipment $795 The bids were laid over for consideration at Friday evening's meeting.

Old Age Pension May Become Effective Soon

Minnesota's old age pension law will in all probability soon become effective after some points as to definitions of rules and regulations have been cleared up by the Minnesota Board of Control. The board must specify what unit of county government is to administer the pension system, whether it will be the welfare boards, poor commissioners official investigators appointed by courts, or an agency appointed by the state board. It was also thought that the $75,000 to which the state law limited all administrative expenses, was too small.

When these details have been cleared up, the law will be presented for federal approval The law was to have gone into effect on March 1, but if approved by the first of April, the March federal money will still be available to Minnesotans who qualify for the pensions.

SCHOOL FACULTY REELECTED FOR 1936 - 1937 TERM

Superintendent Morris Bye Reports on Convention Held at St. Louis

Superintendent Morris Bye reported on the National Convention of the Department of Superintendents which he attended at St. Louis, Missouri, at a meeting of the school board Monday evening, March 9th.

At the meeting the board decided to retain the Teachers Training Department for another year, and application will be forwarded to the State Department of Education expressing the board's desire to retain this department.

All faculty members were re-elected for the school term of 1936-37 with the exception of Mr. S. P. Orwoll, band director, who had previously notified the board that he was not seeking reelection because he had made other plans and wished to discontinue his present position June 1. This leaves at the present time two vacancies in teaching positions for the coming school year, the position of eighth grade history instructor left vacant recently by the death of Miss Cary Johnson and Mr. Orwoll's position as high school band director. All teachers were given salary increases of five dollars a month.

A request made by the Thief River Falls rifle club for the use of the high school gymnasium was granted.

ME-OWING CAT GIVES WARNING FOR BLAZE

International Falls — The meowing of a house cat saved the home of Henry Swenson, at Crystal Beach near International Falls, from destruction by fire. Swenson was getting ready to leave his home on a Saturday evening, when his attention was called to the peculiar actions of the family cat. The animal set up such a me-owing and mewling as to cause Swenson turn back and enter the kitchen. There he found a fire nicely started behind the kitchen stove, which would, within a very short time, have entirely consumed his home.

Increase of Ore Output Expected

The mining outlook for 1936 appears very promising, with an expected increase of iron ore output of 25 per cent or more over 1936, F. A. Wildes, director of the Division of Lands and Minerals, announced last week.

Royalties paid the state on iron ore leases and shipments of ore increased from $954,500 in 1934 to $1,242,000 in 1935, Mr. Wildes said. A further increase may be expected for 1936.

About 125,000 000 tons of merchantable iron ore remain on state lands under lease and on properties surrendered to the state. The Minnesota Tax Commission has valued this ore for taxation purposes at $20,300,000, this being in the eye of the law one half of the full and true value.

About 1,250,000,000 tons of merchantable ore remain in the state, according to the Tax Commission. Assessed valuation of the ore amounts to nearly $225,000,000

WPA Workers Must Make Up Lost Time

Making up lost time is required of WPA workers under a new ruling received from Washington, Victor Christgau, state WPA administrator, announced today.

Project workers who do not work the full number of hours during any semi-monthly period because of circumstances beyond their control will be allowed to make up the lost time for which credit has been allowed either within the same period or the succeeding period, Mr Christgau said.

The ruling, which will go into effect at the start of the next payroll period, is not retroactive. The normal assignment of 30 hours per week plus the hours assigned to workers for making up lost time will not exceed the maximum of eight hours per day and 40 hours per week, according to the instructions.

Starvation Caused Itascr Deer Deaths Analysis Reveals

Starvation and exposure caused the deaths of 20 Istaca Park deer that were sent to University Farm for examination, final reports by Dr. R. Fenstermacher reveal.

Of four deer sent in from other parts of the state, three had died from starvation.

According to Gustav Swanson, biologist of the Division of Game and Fish the insufficient food supply in Itasca Park is the result of an over-population of deer. Local sportsmen have been providing hay, but it has proved impossible to supply all parts of the park because much of it is inaccessible.

Several truck-loads of Itasca deer have already been trapped and removed to new habitats 30 to 40 miles from the park. The work is in charge of federal Emergency Conservation Work authorities. The CCC camp at the park has built 15 traps, and a daily catch of 6 to 8 deer is expected.

COUNCIL BUYS A "CHEV" FOR POLICE DEPT.

Northern Trading Co. Gets Permit to Build at Soo Tracks

ABATEMENT VETO IS UPHELD BY COUNCIL

Plans and Specifications For Tindolph Bath House Adopted

An application for a building permit submitted by Chas. Fiterman of the Northern Trading company for permission to erect a warehouse at the Soo tracks on Atlantic avenue north was granted by the council at an adjourned meeting on Friday evening. The building is to be used as a storage house for hides scrap iron, etc. In response to a protest against the use of the old church building on Horace just south of the Aaseby garage by the Northern Trading company for an uptown store, Mr. Fitterman stated that this building will not be used for hide storage nor for scrap-iron and that the premises will be kept clean and that therefore there should be no objection to his company locating there.

Objection was also voiced against the erection of a garage on the east side near the new parkway by Mr. Brodin and the application which had been laid on the table at the last meeting was refused.

On reconsideration of the abatement of taxes resolution which was vetoed by the mayor last week, the veto was unanimously upheld after a discussion during which some heat was displayed by the mayor and the city attorney over the valuation.

Taking up the consideration of bids submitted for a two door sedan to be used by the police department a ballot was taken resulting in four votes for the Chevrolet, one for the Ford and one for the LaFayette. A resolution accepting the bid of the Northern Chevrolet company was subsequently adopted.

During a discussion on the possibility of securing additional federal money with which to finish the municipal skating rink, the mayor warned the council that when the $15,000 for which bonds were issued to construct tht building, is exhausted, he will refuse to sign any more warrants It was suggested that the building should be properly enclosed while the funds are available and that if there should not be enough to finish, some of the inside work could be dispensed with at this time.

Plans and specifications covering a bath house for Tindolph park were approved and Architect Ecklund was retained to supervise the construction.

C. Gustafson & Son, local implement dealers and distributors of LaFayette and Nash motor cars, are this week celebrating the culmination of twenty-five years of successful business in Thief River Falls.

The business of C. Gustafon & Son has grown with the city. It had its beginning in the spring of 1911 when Mr. Gustafson abandoned farming and with his son Dave, opened an implement firm The first year of business brought in an income on sales of $10,341.71, and has steadily increased during the twenty-five year period, until at the present time the annual sales reach the hundred thousand dollar mark.

Mr. Charles Gustafson is a pioneer resident of this community, and was at one time, before Thief River Falls had been established, engineer on the Great Northern Railway which ran a mixed train as far as St. Hilaire and in 1888 he turned from railroading to farming, settling on a homestead five miles west of this city, where the family lived until 1911. His son Dave who was with his father in the farming venture, and who now manages the affairs of C. Gustafson & Son, has held many offices of importance connected with the implement trade. In January 1925, he was elected president of the Minnesota Implement Dealers Association, the largest organization of its kind in the country, and he is also a director in the national association

Abbie Andrews Orch. To Play Dances Tonight, Friday and Saturday

The Annual Spring Exposition sponsored by the American Legion opened with a flourish today, and will continue through Saturday, with an unusually fine display of 1936 models in nine different automobiles, and the latest in household appliances being exhibited. This evening's program for the opening of the exposition features the 1936 spring fashion parade followed by the dance, music for which will be furnished by Abbie Andrew's dance band.

Miss Jane Marie Early will present her singing and dancing revue the "Early Steppers of 1936" as the feature of Friday and Saturday evening's programs. This chorus is composed of eight young women who will appear in tap routines and a chorus of youngsters, ranging in age from five to nine years, who will present tap and novelty dances. Some of the outstanding numbers in the revue will be tap dancing by three-year old Nicky Colby, blues singing by Mary Aileen McKoane, a burlesque sailor dance, hill billy orchestration by juveniles, and acrobatic dancing.

In addition to the revue six big-time vaudeville acts will be presented both Friday and Saturday evenings. "Connie and Smith", a comedy man-and-woman team, recently featured over station W. T. C. N., will present an entertaining act of high grade comedy interspersed with harmony singing and music. Morris and Betty will present a sensational program of ball room dances, performed with remarkable gracefulness, skill, and agility. "Sjolin and Farnquist" will appear in a breathtaking acrobatic and hand-balancing act, climaxing their performance with a blindfold jump on the hands on a series of pedestals, the highest being 20 feet high. Master juggler, Lester Bode, who has been featured over the Orpheum circuit several times, will entertain the audience wtih novel and original juggling features.

Miss Jane Marie Early, assisted by little Marlys Geraghty, will act as mistress of ceremonies for the vaudeville programs. Each evening's program will be followed by dancing, Abbie Andrew's band being engaged for all three evenings

SQUIRREL DESERTS DIET OF NUTS FOR ICE CREAM

Austin.—A squirrel with propensities for ice cream has been discovered at Austin, and after this it will be hard to get the animal back to a common diet of nuts. A businessman and his wife of that city took home a quart of ice cream during the cold days. They ate a part of it, then placed the lid on the carton and packed it in a snowdrift to keep it frozen until dinner time. Later in the afternoon the man's wife looked out in the yard and saw a squirrel busy at the carton It had pulled the cover off, and with both paws was passing ice cream to its mouth, as fast as it could lick the stuff down. But the cream was cold. The little fellow would rub his hands together to warm them up and then go to eating again. His paws got colder and colder. He sat up, and held his paws in his fur coat and tuck them under his armpits and sat, watching the carton, to see it was not stolen. When the job was finished the squirrel licked its chops and went away. Not a drop of the ice cream was left.

INDIAN SHOWS UP WHITE BROTHERS FOR HONESTY

New Ulm.—A pair of binoculars lost in the wide open spaces of Alberta can generally be given up by the owner as gone for good, and when Dr. Albert Fritsche, New Ulm physician, suffered that experience he felt as might be expected and took the loss philosophically. Dr. Fritsche trekked northward last fall in quest of caribou, mountain sheep bear and other big game, penetrating the primeval wilderness beyond Jasper Park, Alberta, Canada. Two days "out from civilization", Dr. Fritsche discovered his field glasses, an expensive pair were missing. Last week, months after his return, he received a letter from J. F. Smith, grocer and provisioner at Hilton Trail, Alberta, advising that an Indian trapper had found a pair of binoculars, and wondering whether anyone in Dr. Fritsche's party had lost them. The Indian had turned the field glasses over to the storekeeper, in spite of the fact that there were no means of identification on them and they were found in a region where there was no human habitation for miles around. Dr Fritsche received his glasses, and the Indian a generous reward for his extreme honesty.

SNOW THROWN BY ROTARY CRUSHES AUTOMOBILE TOPS

St. James.—Curious citizens of St. James, gathered to see the first M. & St. L. train to reach the town for over a month on March 8, were greeted with a bombardment of snow which did damage amounting to hundreds of dollars. Traveling at a rate of three miles an hour, the railroad rotary came steadily along. It could plainly be seen how the snow was thrown out by the rotary, but it was not until the falling snow crashed through automobile tops, crushed fenders and hoods and damaged half a dozen cars that the people realized that falling snow is heavy. Mrs. Ben Bertilsen was cut about the face and leg by broken glass as the heavy snow did $55 damage to the car she was in. The new car of Manfred Anderson suffered damage to the fenders, radiator shell, and hood. An old roadster driven by Albert Babolian suffered the complete destruction of its top as the heavy snow crashed through. John Johnson's car was damaged when wood support stays for the top were crushed Other cars were damaged by broken glass, crashed fenders and tops.

CROOKED BILL HEN CATCHES THREE CROOKS

Lamberton—A hen with a crooked bill taken in a raid on the henhouse at Joseph Poltz farm, near Lamberton, resulted in the arrest of three young men. It is alleged the men had been conducting a series of raids on the henhouse. The last time the hen with the funny beak disappeared. It was traced through a poultry buying house, resulting in the arrest of the three young men. They are awaiting trial.

BUY 8,500 RABBITS

Cambridge.—If there is such a thing as being champion purchasers of dead rabbits, Marlo Zwiers and H. C. Roth of Cambridge are leading candidates for the honor, for these two men have purchased more than 8,500 bunnies and put more than $850 into the pockets of hunters in that vicinity. The two men have disposed of their rabbits thru markets at Philadelphia, Chicago, and Milwaukee.

HONEST MAN TO PAY AN OLD DEBT

Gaylord.—Eight years ago a farmer visited the office of the county treasurer of Sibley county. He wanted a license for his car, but didn't have the money. He said he would pay for it as soon as his cows freshened in the spring. The kindly treasurer issued the license. Hard luck and later the depression made it impossible for him to pay the license fee except in part. The other day he appeared at the treasurer's office and paid the balance of the eight year old obligation.

CHOPSTICKS

While most of Minnesota wallows in 10-foot snow banks, it is summer in the Willmar State Asylum, where inmates have grown a lemon tree to a height of six feet. There are six good sized lemons on the tree which will ripen soon. Bus drivers on the route from the Twin Cities to Bemidji are accused of offering their innocent passengers a small wager that a deer will be sighted from the bus, a "cinch" bet, since it is extremely rare that a deer is not sighted within a distance of six miles from Itasca State Park; the deer do not seem to be bothered by the bus siren any more, but leave the road side in a hurry if the bus stops Walter Glen, Badger, was killed when he was crushed between two sno wplow outfits on Roseau county roads. The first 1936 entry for the "Can you beat it?" contest is submitted by C. V. Whitchurch, of Thief River Falls, in the form of a huge egg, weighing four ounces laid by a White Wyandotte hen. Twin girls born to Mr. and Mrs. Marvin E. Hervey of Oklee in Red Lake county were born on separate days; the first arrived shortly before midnight on February 24, the following day.

HOAX ON CITIZENS PROVES IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Sleepy Eye.—Citizens of Sleepy Eye were victims of a hoax which proved that it pays to advertise. Judge Thomas Lang entered the Leitschuh-Seidl hardware store and asked Mr. Seidl if he cared for a couple of nice catfish. Seidl, being fond of fish, gladly accepted, and, of course, invited the Judge to a meal at his home. Later on, when the package was finally unwrapped, there were two of the nicest looking little "cats" all packed in ice. One weighed 37 grains and the other 42 grains. Soon fishermen, one after another, entered the store to see the large fish. After about 15 people had called, it was decided to make all register their names, and by evening about 310 people had entered the store to see the fish. Nobody told the joke, but kept it a secret till others had gone to see for themselves. On the following business day, starting in at about 6 o'clock in the morning, Seidl was pestered with phone calls wanting anywhere from 2 pounds to 90 pounds of fish.

Hiram Wins the New Car Argument

Mirandy's got a hunch that we should git us a new car by gee, she says the bus that we have got is most worn out, it ain't so hot no more, it ain't streamlined a bit, I guess that she's ashamed of it. It leaks at ev'ry gasket and acts like the gears was full of sand; two cylinders don't fire no more, I step the throttle to the floor and yet can hardly climb a hill. I swore I'd keep that car until my bank account was nice and fat, yet it don't look so good at that and runs still worse. Mirandy said some day I'll find the motor dead, and then we'll have to walk, by gum, or else just sit around and hum.

A feller ought to have some pride when he goes out to take a ride, so if Mirandy Jane and me came out in a new car, by gee, the neighbors all would think, I guess at farmin' we are some success. They make them cars so pretty now, I'll have to rustle up somehow enough to git one, it will pay. Instead of takin' most a day to git to town, my errands done I'll git back home before the sun is very high, in time to do my work before the day is through. Oh, shucks, why argue when I know before the week is out I'll go and trade in this old boat of mine for one a million times as fine? We ain't so old, in things like these my wife and I have young ideas!

Leaders See Adjournment of Congress About May 1

Washington, D. C. With eight of the ten major appropriation bills already passed in the House and five of them approved by the Senate and with the Administration leaders of both Houses pushing along but a few of the scores of important legislative proposals up for consideration or held in committees, adjournment of the 74th Congress is generally expected to come about May 1.

Speaker Byrns and other Democratic leaders have predicted the close of the session at about this date.

Opposes Third Party This Year

Speaking at the Town Hall in the swanky atmosphere of the Shoreham Hotel here in Washington a week ago Sunday, Governor Phillip La Follette declared that he personally would not be associated with a third party movement in the coming election Third party enthusiasts and there are many of them, point out that the two La Follettes, especially Senator Bob, Jr., also opposed the starting of the new Progressive party in Wisconsin a few years ago but they were overridden and a new party started with the two brothers going along with the movement.

Veterans Honor Buckler

Congressman R. T. Buckler of the 9th District and all the other congressmen who supported and voted for the payment of the adjusted service certificates were honored Sunday, March 15 at Norfolk, Virginia, at a big national celebration of the "adjusted compensation victory." W. B. Scaher, Jr. of Norfolk, who generally is given credit for starting the agitation for the bonus even before the World War was over. Congressman Buckler was awarded an honor citation for his fight in behalf of the veterans. Leaders of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, United Spanish War Veterans, Disabled American Veterans and their auxiliaries attended the celebration.

Is There Any Excuse?

Alfred Bingham, liberal and progressive son of the conservative former U. S. Senator Bingham of the New England area, asked his audience this question at a recent Washington, D. C. meeting Is there any legitimate and valid excuse for poverty distress and suffering in this country of "milk and honey" where there seems to be "too much of everything?" No one offered any reason so he went on to explain how the "production for use" program would end our present conditions. Mr. Bingham is the executive secretary of the American Commonwealth Federation, a national third party group which is now making efforts to unite all liberals and progressives in a national new party movement. Incidently Senator Gerald P. Nye, who most often is mentioned as the presidential candidate if a third party is in the field this year, presided at a recent debate on the subject "New Deal - New Party" between Congressman Thomas R. Amlie, Progressive of Wisconsin and Congressman Kent Keller, Liberal Democrat of Illinois.

Various Free Reports and Books Offered By Buckler

To anyone interested Congressman Buckler will be pleased to send free for the asking any of the following publications, a limited quantity of which have become available to his office:

Agriculture Yearbooks for 1933, '34 or '35—Annual reports of the War Department for 1906, '10, '15, '16, '17, or '18 (These are of historical interest)—Annual Reports of the Navy Department for 1916, '29 and '30—A 2440 page report (1913) on the "Field Operations of the Bureau of Soils", (of value to students and others interested in the study of soils)—Navy Register (1932).—Army Register (1920)—Annual report of the Smithsonian Institution for several recent years. (of scientific, educational and historic interest.)

Notes at Random

Senator Norris of Nebraska has been demanding the removal of James A. Farley as Postmaster General and declares that President Roosevelt will lose many votes in the presidential election "because of the way the Post Office Department has been run".

Over 50 percent of every Federal dollar goes for war purposes. In 1913 the world spent a billion and a half on its armament but after the world had been made safe for democracy in 1918 it kept on increasing its expenditures so that in 1934 it spent over seven and a half billions.

Heywood Broun, liberal writer for hundreds of America's daily newspapers, stated recently in his syndicated feature column: "Having established his own happiness and comfort, Alfred E Smith has assailed every act of the greatest humanitarian ever elected to the Presidency of the U. S." Many people will dispute this and point to Abe Lincoln's humane qualities.

WE ARE SUSPICIOUS OF GREEKS BEARING GIFTS

The communists are loudly proclaiming that they are supporting the farmer-labor forces in Minnesota and will throw their weight into the battle on the side of the association, its candidates and platform. Their national secretary, Earl Browder speaking over the radio some time ago, urged the formation of a national farmer-labor party, and pledged the support of the communists to the program and candidates of such a party if, and when, it is organized. All of which is fine. If the communists are "going our way" they should be welcome, in spite of the fact that numerically their vote is small and that their incessant thunder is probably of dubious value. The farmer-laborites are first of all liberals, "liberalism at its worst" as the communists have often shouted at us, and we have always invited people of other political faiths who may come to the conclusion that there is some fundamental shortcoming in the present economic system to join us in applying sane, rational remedies looking towards the eventual establishment of the co-operative commonwealth.

However, the farmer-laborites probably have a vivid recollection of the lambasting they got from the communists in the 1934 campaign and may be inclined to look the gift horse in the mouth. We have a painful memory of communist speakers addressing the Minnesota legislature as the climax to the 1933 "hunger march" on the capitol, giving the 65th district delegation, Naplin, Day and Melby, the nastiest tongue lashing that we have ever listened to. This, in spite of the fact that the 65th district senator and representatives was the only district delegation in the state to hold a one hundred per cent record in support of progressive and remedial measures. That they were singled out to the exclusion of all others did not tend to make us like it any better.

During the legislative session of 1935 we became impatient with a communist who came to us and asked us to sign a petition for the passage of the Bennett Social Insurance Bill which has been introduced in the Minnesota legislature, and the Lundeen Social Insurance Bill which had been introduced in Congress and reminded him that we had supported the men who introduced those measures and other candidates on the farmer-labor ticket who, if elected, would have supported the measures. We also pointed out that unless our memory was faulty, he had been out campaigning against these candidates.

And then he let the cat out of the bag. It seems that the communists had opposed the progressives in the campaign in order to elect lawmakers as reactionary as possible, to make conditions as bad as possible, as soon as possible, to break down capitalism as fast as possible. We are sure that the farmers, home-owners, undernourished children, harassed mothers, unemployed workers and relief clients will appreciate this highminded motive, even if we can't.

But then the International met, and decreed that the communists would support all progressive movements and make a united front against war and Fascism. Hence the change of tactics. Things were just going bad too fast to make the Russian experiment comfortable. The rapid rise of fascism would make war by fascist countries on Russia inevitable and Stalin doesn't want war so communists don't want war. Neither do we, so we can unite against war and fascism.

But let us understand each other. Farmer-laborites are committeed to changing the economic system from a profit motive to the production for use motive, by a peaceable transition based on education of the masses and co-operative action, by the ballot. We believe in democracy, free speech, a free press and free assemblage. We are opposed to war and to dictatorships, whether they are by fascists or communists. We are more concerned with making America safe for democracy than with making Russia safe for soviets. If the communists are "going up our alley," they are welcome, but no entangling alliances, please.

AROUND AND AROUND IT GOES—

(Benson Co., (N. D.) Farmers Press)

And where it will stop nobody knows!

The political wheel in North Dakota has started spinning and from the impetus it received last week at Bismarck it will have us all dizzy before it stops.

The picture shows several of the leading spirits of the 1934 Langer campaign now aligned against him with the "rumpers" of 1934. Langer has retained some of his friends and has recruited new faces to battle with him. The big question is whether that almost-fanatical following of Langer will still be strong enough at the primaries to overcome the drive of Langer's ex-lieutenants.

A powerful group, with control of state offices, trained in Langer's campaign tactics, combined with the rumpers of 1934, will use Langer's own methods in fighting him for the nomination at the primaries next June. Langer is generally conceded a great personal following throughout the state but he will face a determined and aggressive machine this year.

While the factional battle has split the League-Republican ranks, the Democrats are girding up their loins, smoothing over inter-party differences in an effort to frame a machine that will sweep through the fall campaign, victorious over Welford or Langer as the case may be. They have the opportunity to capitalize on differences in the League but will have to unite on a strong ticket.

The wheel is going merrily and the clever politicians are busy trying to figure out the winning number.

MAKING PRODIGAL SONS

(E. Howard Brown)

The liquor traffic does more than any other agency in this country, to make prodigal sons. It entices them away from home. It takes away from them their money, their health and their character.

It introduces them to treacherous friends. It lowers them to the level of beasts. It sends them to the gutter like swine.

In bringing back the liquor traffic to our state and nation, we are opening the doors of the pit and making it easy for the young men and young women to go wrong.

Prodigal sons are not made in a moment. We are beginning the process by which they are created and we shall pay the price of their debauchery.

To make prodigal sons, there must be boys. There must be new customers for liquor. Old customers went to jail, were hung for murder, sent to the insane hospital and ran out of money.

Unless 2,000,000 boys start drinking soon, repeal of prohibition will not help much. One family in every five must furnish a boy. Are you willing to help? Which one of your boys will you give?

Did you vote for repeal?

If we make the liquor business pay what the friends of liquor figure on, some of us must furnish some of the boys. And somebody's boy must continue to become prodigal sons.

SWEDEN THINKS OF MASSES

(The Nation)

Sweden's new budget is a tribute to both the efficiency and the social-mindedness of its Labor government. Although expenditures will exceed last years by 5.4 per cent, there will be a surplus of 20 million kronor, which will be applied to a 12 per cent reduction on income taxes. The reduction in the normal tax will be of benefit primarily to the less well-to-do classes and is vigorously opposed by the large taxpayers, who have been clamoring for the elimination of the surtaxes levied on large incomes during the crisis. These are to be maintained and consolidated into a permanent system with an even sharper incidence of taxation. The increase in expenditures is to be devoted chiefly to social and cultural purposes, such as old-age and invalid pensions, loans to farmers and cottagers, public housing and scholarships. There is, however, an increase of five million kroner in the appropriation for national defense. Perhaps the most unusual feature in the budget is the plan to amortize the whole of the short-term indebtedness incurred during the depression, a large part of which will be paid off by the end of the current budget year.

THEY WILL REVOLT

(Mille Lacs Times)

Speaking of the public debt, which so many of the Republicans are "viewing with alarm", we would say there is a still greater public debt. And that is the debt that this nation owes to the millions of young American men and women just coming on the stage of activities in the economic life of the nation, with no prospects for employment or for establishing a competence for themselves. To imagine that these Americans are going to view with complacency a life devoted to living off a dole or relief work is to believe that the spirit of the youth of America has changed, and that in place of the former spirit of enterprise and adventure we now have a lot of dubs and mutes who will accept the paltry leavings and scraps that may be handed ou to them by a thieving, corporation ridden system. The nation owes them an opportunity and the government that refuses them this does so at its peril.

A SWEDISH LESSON

(Cannon Falls Beacon)

Some of our legislators of Scandinavian ancestry who have been trying to frame laws to put an end to drunken driving might take a lesson from the fatherland. Under a Swedish law, persons convicted on a charge of drunken driving must serve a term of imprisonment with out option of a fine. Invoked during the year 1935, the police record shows a reduction over the previous year. In 1934, the number of charges for drunkeness at the wheel was 214, against 159 for 1935.

Here in this country we usually put teeth in our laws but when it comes to enforcing them it's a different story. Drunken driving here is a more serious offense than reckless driving so the ordinary procedure is to let the culprit be arraigned under the less serious charge. This should not be done and if it were not for this pampering and feeling sorry for those who drink and drive our accidents could be materially reduced.

ADVERTISING THAT SOON KILLS ITSELF

When advertising serves a constructive industry, no newspaper can have any right or reason to injure that industry. But what is going to be the role of the great body of American newspapers when the social conditions produced by the licensed liquor trade become worse and worse? The increased profits of the liquor trade mean increased crime, increased destitution, and increased misery.

The purpose of any form of liquor control is to decrease drinking. The purpose of liquor advertising is to increase drinking. In consideration of this problem, the words of Malcolm W. Bingay (of the Detroit Free Press) may well give us pause: "What paper would long get . . . any advertising that persistently and willfully did everything . . . to prevent it from making profits?"

Could a more persuasive argument be presented to every state in the Union for abolishing liquor advertising?—Christian Science Montor.

NOT ALL BAD

(From Co-op Reporter)

Alfred Sloan, president of General Motors, speaking recently before the National Association of Manufacturers, said:

"Government as such creates nothing. . . There must be brought home to the consciousness of all that the more government takes, the less each one has—no one can possibly escape."

But, Alfred, where would the motor industry be today if your cars had to run through the mud and the ruts of yesteryear? And who built the roads anyway?

The Silver Question

By Maynard C. Krueger

Increased government expenditures sometimes lead to inflation. It depends upon how they are financed.

If a sales tax is levied on ordinary people who have to spend all of their income to live, and the proceeds of the tax are used to finance unemployment relief, the increased government expenditure is offset by the decreased expenditure on the part of the people who eat and wear less because they have to pay the tax. There is no increase in total expenditures and therefore no increase in prices.

If increased government expenditures are financed by borrowing from banks the money they would otherwise have lying idle in their vaults, there is an increase in total expenditures. Or if they are financed by a tax on people whose money would otherwise be lying idle in their vaults, there is an increase in total expenditures, and therefore a tendency to raise prices.

Effect On Price

Whether the funds for increased government expenditures are obtained by borrowing, by ordinary taxation, or by a capital levy is not an important question so far as prices are concerned. If the funds are funds that would not otherwise be spent at the time, increased government expenditures have the same elevating effect on prices as increased expenditures on the part of private individuals.

It should be observed, however, that a five billion dollar increase in government expenditures will not offset a decrease of twenty-five billion in private expenditures.

Attempts to balance budgets by inflation are often self-defeating. If a government's expenses exceed its income, and the balance is made up by printing paper money, then prices rise. What usually happens, however, is that the rise in prices affects the government's expenditures quicker than it affects its income from taxation, and the next year there is a bigger deficit to be met by running the printing presses.

What About Silver?

The remonetization of silver will no more bring about inflation than the issuance of a similar amount of any other kind of money. The silver question has served the administration well as a red herring. It has kept popular attention from more fundamental matters, as did prohibition in Hoover's day.

The silver question is not a monetary problem. It is not even an economic problem. It is almost purely a political problem.

Silver is mined in seven western states. Because of the political situation in 1787, each state has two Senators. That gives these silver states 15 per cent of the senate, even though they have only 3 per cent of the House of Representatives, and less than 3 per cent of the population of the country.

Senate Dangers

Beyond that, these states seem to follow the practice of sending their Senators to Washington to stay until they die, while other states change their Senators more frequently. Thus, by seniority, these repesentatives of the comparatively insignificant silver interest accumulate many of the important Senate committee chairmanships, conferring on them a political weight greater than is indicated by their already swollen 15 per cent of the votes in the Senate.

The economic importance of silver is amply illustrated by a recent occurrence. Lead and silver are mined together. When the government recently began buying silver to raise its price, the price of silver went up so much that the production of silver increased so much that the price of lead went down so much that the market value of the existing stock of lead went down $25,000,000 or more than the entire value of the total annual output of silver.

Farmers' Union Letter

The Farmers Union Legislative Committee came home from Washington, March 1st, and separated into two groups to attend the regional conferences of farm leaders and agricultural extension directors called by the Federal Department of Agriculture—one at Chicago, March 5, 6th, and 7th, and one at Salt Lake City during the week beginning March 9th.

Anderson, Hones, Talbott, and O'Connor attended the Chicago conference, while Doheny and Rolph of Montana attended the Salt Lake City conference. The Committee will assemble again in Washington on March 18th at which time final details of administration of the new soil conservation program will be determined.

The Chicago conference included the twelve corn or grain belt states of the Middle West—the so-called bread basket of the United States—where it is estimated nearly one-half of the five hundred million dollars, agricultural subsidy, will be distributed to farmers who cooperate with the program.

The purpose of the four regional conferences of which Chicago and Salt Lake City were two, was to permit the farmers and their representatives, the field administrators, and the economists of the colleges to make recommendations on principles and details of administering the program. In attendance at the Chicago conference were state presidents of the Farm Bureau and the Farmers Union, Masters of state Granges, representatives of marketing co-ops, Deans of agricultural colleges, agricultural editors, and extension directors.

The Chicago conference was unanimous in recommending a simple, flexible, and easily understood program for 1936, one which would involve no sudden drastic shift in crop planting practices, leaving for later years the gradual shift from farming practices which result in wind and water erosion.

When the Committee returns to Washington, every possible effort will be made to pass the Commodity Exchange Bill, which all farm leaders are now agreed is a necessary safeguard to the development of a sound system of cooperative marketing.

The Revolutionary Theory

Ridicule of the reds shows its head now and then, even in this advanced age. In reality, there never was a "typical" bolshevik who was not a "phoney". The newspaper red is a creature of a distorted imagination.

But even so it is well to get the theory of revolution straight. Everyone agrees now that, if allowed to go along unchecked, capitalism will lapse into chaotic violence which will result either in a fascist or a proletarian dictatorship. In deference to the staunch patriot, who does not want dictatorship of any kind, but pure Americanism, I might say that there IS a third way, which must be traveled before things go too far.

The third way is by a union of radical forces, peacefully to put in to practice what has been shouted from a million soapboxes ever since "Das Kapital" appeared in 1861. Recent events in Europe have demonstrated the effectiveness of the United Front, when honestly and sincerely carried out. A United Front can revolutionize a country overnight, if it is a real united front. It can enact and carry out social insurance, old age pensions, youth aid, and a thousand and one other items of social import.

This is as much revolution as the other way—the "blo-o-ody" way. If the end is achieved—and no compromises given the ruling class (which has had all the advantages up to now, so why compromise?)—the so-called peaceful revolution is as welcome to the honest red as a bloody one—much more welcome, in fact.

But experience has shown that when it comes to the squeeze the man with a little property, the shopkeeper with his little independent shop, the farmer with his successful five acres, the independent storekeeper, would think twice, and three times, before surrendering their fancied security for a nameless, formless (to them) revolutionary government. In Russia, the greatest difficulties have occurred not in combatting the large industrialists, but in trying to fit independent farmers (kulaks) and small shopkeepers into the new life. In the feudalism of a small town, it is difficult to draw a line between a man's private affairs and his business (which some may claim is also his private affair, but which is in reality a public enterprise). It is not so difficult to draw a line in a highly industrialized community. This is merely stating that capitalism must develop to the point where we have only capitalists and laborers.

As senseless as trying to eat green apples is the attempt to force revolution upon an unripe country. The thing to do is to hasten the ripening; this can be done in many ways, and is being done rapidly by our competitive system, which forces the little fellow to the wall and favors the big fellow. A said affair, but revealing: for the sooner the cleavage is made the sooner the sides can be formed, and the revolution take place. Business men are radicals now who were staunch republicans in 1929. Why? Simply because they are being lined up for slaughted by the octopi.

Revolutions of all kinds are fought by the under-class against the upper-class. The proletarian revolution is best fought by propertyless men, for they have absolutely nothing to lose—"but their chains". The intellectual class is small help to them, for intellectuals, but their very sense of superiority, always think they can take care of themselves, as do the small shopkeeper and the garden farmer.

But even so, it is possible to join the radical worker with the radical intellectual, the radical farmer, and the radical business man, in a united support of a humanitarian government. The new society must be built with the materials at hand.

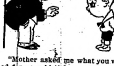
"A liberal", explains Senator William E. Borah to an inquiring reporter, "is one who is not a conservative". Perhaps he would unfold another cerebal wrinkle and divulge the fact that a radical is one who is neither.

MAKING A CHOICE



"Mother asked me what you wanted for your birthday, and I told her maybe you'd like something for the house."

"Oh, you did! And what did she select—new curtains or a pickle dish?"

Right, Your Left

Santa at the Gulch

"Did Santa Claus visit Crimson Gulch?" asked the traveling salesman.

"Maybe," said Mesa Bill. "A few gangsters happened along and we took the guns away from them, which as Christmas gifts were highly appreciated."

Perfectly Natural

Visitor to Toy Market—You make your toys very natural and humanlike. Have you ever made a failure with a toy?

Toy Maker—Sure. One day I made a toy tramp an' it wouldn't work.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

The Holy Season of Lent with its emphasis of the Cross teaches the lesson of Divine responsibility and of God's social conscience. Of life poured out for the good of others. As something not the work of evil, but the product of Love.

The Cross reveals Jesus was responsibility conscience.

Jesus took upon Himself the sense of responsibility and more, the responsibility of others. Indifference increases the load on the one who cares.

This attitude of Jesus can only be successful as others remanifest it.

The Scripture states: "Hereby know we love because He laid down His life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethern".

Negligence, indifference to the responsibility of social responsibility make us blameworthy for social vices. "None of us liveth unto himself or dieth to himself."

"Do you know," said a citizen, "when I see a poor devil drunk and brutal, I feel, a sort of shame as if I myself had some hand in it."

PINE COUNTY OIL CO-OP'S SALES UP $24,000 IN 1935.

Askov, Minn.— An increase of $24,000 in the total business of the Pine County Co-op Oil association in 1935 was reported at the annual meeting of the association here, Total sales were $58,903, as against $34,352 in 1934.

The association made a net profit of $7,091, as compared to $4,405 in 1934. However, because of expenses incurred in the opening of a new filling station at Finlayson and a new bulk station at Hinckley and an increase in accounts receivable, it was left to the board of directors to decide whether a dividend should be declared.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelson

Herbert Hoover is a liberalist!

Thus did the State Chairman of the Young Republicans of Colorado introduce the ex-president when the latter addressed the organization at Colorado Springs on March 7th.

* * * *

However, one fears that in trying to wear the clothes of liberalism, the chubby-faced Herbert is parading about in stolen breeches.

Indeed, had the world been compelled to rely for its progress on the Hoover brand of liberalism, the uneasy suspicion arises that we should still be hanging by our tails from the branches of jungle trees in some prehistoric forest.

* * * *

But the statement does illustrate the almost startling change in national thinking which has taken place during the few short years since the LaFollette-Coolidge campaign of 1924. . .

Out of a total of 29 million votes cast, less than 5 million were for the Progressive Robert M LaFollette. He carried only his own state of Wisconsin.

And throughout the campaign those who had the temerity to lend their support to the Progressive were villified by the adherents of the reactionary Coolidge. In describing the liberals who gathered under the LaFollette banner, the mildest terms used, from Republican platform and by Republican press, were 'radical', 'Bolshevik' and 'Red'.

When the results of the election became definitely known, the Republicans commented, with vast satisfaction, that the 'clear thinkers, had again saved the day for Americanism!

* * * *

And now, wonder of wonders, the ex-head of the Republican Party is himself a liberal!

This column is reminded of the Englishman who was reading his newspaper upside down. Someone, observing, remarked that reading it thus must be rather difficult . . .

"Yes, it does take a bit of doing, what!" said the Englishman.

And, in view of Hoover's record it must 'take a bit of doing' to try to wear the mantle of liberalism.

* * * *

One may doubtless expect to hear, one of these days, that Andy Mellon, too, is a liberal. Possibly Morgan, the DuPonts, Raskob and the rest of the purse-fat lads, will likewise flock to the standard of liberalism.

Perhaps old Andy Mellon will be able to find someone who will trade him a pink shirt for the knee pants he wore as Hoover's ambassador to the Court of St. James.

But the term 'liberalism' may lend itself to varying definitions.

If his theory that by pouring wealth into the laps of the privileged and rich, a little might trickle through to the hungry masses below, is liberalism, then Hoover is a liberal. . .

If it is liberalism to believe, as he obviously does believe, that a temporarily - unbalanced federal budget is more to be deplored than the existence of human want and suffering, then he is a liberal. . .

If it is liberalism, as he and his small privileged clique have shown all too plainly they believe, that the sign of the dollar should superside the sign of the cross, then he is a liberal.

New Way

Jean was visiting his grandmother in the country when some of the neighbors came to call. When they were all out in the yard he climbed upon the henhouse ready for a jump. He called:

"See what I can do."

Suddenly his feet slipped and down he went. He jumped up quickly, saying, "I've done it lots of times, but I never done it that way before."—Indianapolis News.

Paint Being So Sticky

A portrait painter approached an old villager and asked to be allowed to paint his features. The old man refused even after he was offered money by the painter.

"It's money easily earned," prompted the artist.

"I know that," the old settler replied, stroking his whiskers thoughtfully, "but I'm wonderin' how I could get the paint off."

Removed All Her Doubts

They were going to visit a friend who had moved out in the country.

"John," said his wife, "are you sure you know the way out there?"

"I know it as well as your hand does the way to my pocket," he growled.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Invitation Accepted

"What did the reception committee say to the political boss?"

"He said, 'Welcome to our city.'"

"What did the boss do?"

"As requested, he has helped himself."

CALF HAS PIG'S EARS, HIDE HALF INCH THICK

Nashwauk.—The Range usually has a hard time trying to beat the "freaks" which are born in sections where agriculture is more prominent but a calf born at Sucker Lake about five miles north of Nashwauk will challenge anything in southern areas. A cow belonging to Nester Maki gave birth to the freak, which resembled a pig. It took three men nine hours to assist with the birth. The calf was twice the size of a normal calf. The head resembled a cow's but had pig's ears, was so large that it was necessary to remove it in pieces with pliers. The hide of the animal was half an inch thick. The ears, hide, legs, and tail were like those of a pig. The cow survived the ordeal of the birth and is doing nicely.

CROSBY COOPERATIVE SHOWS A BUSINESS BOOST OF $22,500

Crosby, Minn.—Stockholders of the Crosby Workers Cooperative association held their annual meeting here recently. One hundred stockholders and patrons were present.

Business of the cooperative showed an increase of $22,150 in 1935 over that of the previous year. Gross profits were reduced from 14.89 per cent to 12.09 per cent, resulting in a saving of that much to the patrons. Due to increased business, an operating profit was shown as against an operating loss in 1934.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

Drunkeness	110
Diseases	100
Ambition	73
Excessive labor	73
Misfortune	69
Old age	69
Disappointment	54
Religion	29
Politics	26
Crime	10
Love	47

It is the duty of every Christian to help teach the young the awful results of drinking alcoholic liquor. Those who have been led into the habit of drinking while they were young need to be encouraged to conquer the habit and to become total abstainers from drinking this ruinous, deadly, alcoholic poison.

Let Our Motto Be

GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

TWENTIETH CENTURY DISEASES

The more we study the history of health and disease through the ages, the more we are convinced that the different ages have their different diseases. In Biblical times we read much of leprosy; in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth centuries there was the Black Death; in Colonial times and the early Nineteenth century, rabies was a dreaded disease, and diphtheria and typhoid were scourges as late as twenty years ago.

But medical science has conquered these and a number of other infectious diseases, and we were beginning to think that when we had conquered the common cold and other respiratory diseases, the heart and kidney ailments, rheumatism and cancer, and upsets of the intestinal and nervous systems, we should have the human race pretty well on the road to health.

And then along came two completely new diseases, infantile paralysis and sleeping sickness. These are diseases of the brain and spinal cord. They are our Twentieth century diseases. So far they have us completely baffled.

For all the work we have done on them, we still know very little concerning them.

Infantile paralysis made its appearance in the nineties of the last century and became epidemic after 1900. Sleeping sickness was first observed in the post-war period. It followed the influenza wave of 1918 and 1919. Then came a new type of sleeping sickness, encephalitis, not nearly so fatal nor so disabling as the other type. Encephalitis made its first appearance in this country in Paris, Ill., in the summer of 1932, then in St. Louis and western Illinois in 1933, and again in Illinois in the summer of 1934.

The first thing a scientist does in studying a new disease is to learn what animal is suspectible to that disease, and then to determine whether the disease is caused by germs so infinitesimally small that no microscope yet made is powerful enough to reveal them—this second type of germ is called a virus. Medical laboratories throughout the country have been trying to inoculate all kinds of animals with infantile paralysis and sleeping sickness, but so far it is only the monkey that has proved susceptible. And since monkeys are expensive animals, there are only a few research centers that have the funds to carry on this experimentation.

The scientists working on these two new diseases have been able to determine that they are caused by two invisible viruses, but more than that we don't know. We also believe that the common cold and influenza, and smallpox, chickenpox, measles and mumps are caused by viruses, but whether there is any "family connection" between all the virus diseases, we haven't yet determined.

Bacteriologists are now beginning to speak of "virus flora." They think that the people of various sections of the world and of a country have a "virus flora" in their noses and throats that is as different from the virus flora in another section of the world as the "plant flora" of one section is different from the plant life of another section.

Now we each get used to our own particular virus flora, and when we are well we are quite happy with it. It is when we have a breakdown in health that our own virus flora can give us trouble.

Also we get used to living with the virus flora of our neighbors when they are well. It is when they are sick that we are liable to get too much of their cold virus or their measles virus for our own good.

During the World war several millions of young and adult men were collected from the four corners of the earth and transported to western Europe. Here they lived in intimate contact with each other in crowded quarters; they were subjected to extreme and grueling mental and physical strain. There could not help but be an exchange of individual virus flora by coughing, sneezing, handshaking, etc. Nothing like such an exchange had ever happened in the history of the world before. The universal influenza wave of 1918 and 1919 was a result of this kaleidiscopic mixing. It was incubated, ripened and spread from western Europe.

One good thing about the Twentieth century diseases is that they do not seem to be contagious in the same sense as diphtheria, scarlet fever and typhoid fever. There is seldom a second case in the same household.

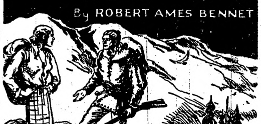
CAUGHT IN THE WILD

By ROBERT AMES BENNET



Copyright by Robert Ames Bennet
WNU Service

"Long by canoe or even by steamer," Garth agreed. "Not so far, though, by air passage. We can make the emergency supply post by two or three hours' paddling downstream."

"What of it? That fellow Tobin told us planes never stop there, unless foul weather runs them short of gas."

Garth met the suddenly anxious looks of Lilith and her father with a smile.

"All pilots have orders to sight non-stop posts in passing. Tobin has a distress signal. There'll be a plane coming south from the Arctic coast within three days—probably tomorrow. You'll be lying in the lap of luxury at Edmonton within a week or 10 days."

The millionaire felt at the grease-and-pitch mat of his month-old beard. He chuckled. "A bath and a barber! Hand over that last cigar, Garth. Here's where I celebrate."

He opened the gold-mounted case, bit off the tip of the sole surviving Havana, and snapped his patent lighter. It failed to flair. He tossed it over into the water, and turned to Garth, with an impatient command: "Give me a light."

"Only two matches left, sir."

"Enough to light a cigar. Pass them over."

Instead of taking out his waterproof match case Garth took up his paddle. "The rule is never burn your last match until you have to."

Huxby dipped his own paddle. "Come on Mr. Ramill. By his own account, three hours more will rid us of him and his insolence."

"Wait," said Lilith. She pointed to the bank where the pleasant green of young spruces showed among the weathered white trunks of fire-killed birch trees. "If we have so much time we'll land there and clean up."

"But—with the post so near, my dear Lillith!" Huxby protested. "That fellow Tobin had any amount of soap."

"All the more reason. I'll not have even a common navvy see me in this condition. The rags can't be helped. But the dirt!—" Out burst her suppressed loathing for all the grease and grime that smirched herself and the men. "Mud! slime! rancid fat! spoiled meat! Alan Garth, I know that I have to go in dressed like a squaw. But this—this filth!"

"Not necessary, Miss Ramill. A scouring with hardwood ashes and sand will do the work of soap. We can go in sweet."

They landed where an ice jam of some spring break-up had gouged through the muskeg mud at the end of the ridge and left a clear beach of glacial sand and gravel. Up over the ten-foot cut bank, Garth started a fire with one of his two remaining matches.

No cleaning could be done until the fires burned out. When Mr. Ramill took off the spits of cooked meat, all squatted down as usual to share the meal. Garth smiled his thanks as he took the slab of hot meat handed to him by the millionaire. The smile hardened.

A sudden change had fallen upon his three companions. He could easily guess the cause. They realized that this was the last meal they were to share as fellow voyageurs with him.

The moment they stepped from the canoe onto the wharf at the emergency refueling post, their forced companionship with him in the lost valley and on all the long trip would be at an end. Instead of a trio dependent upon their opponent for food and guidance—for life itself—they would be a trio not only independent of, but hostile to him and his interests.

That was at least true of the two men. And even Lilith betrayed in her look and manner a vivid consciousness of the impending change of relationship. As for Huxby, the cold gloating in his stare showed how he was anticipating the robbery and ruin of the man who had so far outplayed them.

Mr. Ramill had reacted in his own way. His temporary friendliness had disappeared. He was again the bland, adroit investor in mines who so generously presented worthy prospectors with a thousand, and in return took over claims worth many thousands. Huxby had been a hopeless case. But Garth had fancied there were possibilities in the older pirate.

Lilith Ramill, however, was the real disappointment. Though she had done nothing so far as Garth could tell, to disprove her declared hatred of him, she had seemed more and more to show a spirit of fair play. It had led him into thinking she possessed a true spirit of sportsmanship.

By the time Garth finished his own half-spoiled meat, he managed also to swallow his bitterness. After all, what else could he have expected? The girl was the daughter of Burton Ramill—the selfish spoiled daughter of an unscrupulous business sharper.

He broke in upon her rubbing of the begrimed diamond: "May I ask you for the salt and tea bags, Miss Ramill? They're as good as empty, I see. But I can refill them for my return to the valley."

She stared at him, wide-eyed. "Valley! You—you're going back there?"

"To be sure. Why not? You can't suppose I'll abandon all that million in my platinum placer."

Huxby's face had gone blank. His agate eyes stared with all their cold rancor. But Mr. Ramill chuckled. "Of course, my dear—the placer. He will be going back to his placer next spring."

The girl did not turn her astonished gaze away from Garth. "Dad does not understand. I do. You mean now! You planned it from the first. All that caribou meat and the—"

"Good guess," he broke in. "It has taken a bit longer than I expected to get you out. But in my light birch-bark, I fancy I can make the head of canoe water before the freeze-up. After that, frost and snow will make no difference. I'll have a pair of webs—snowshoes."

The millionaire spoke in place of his wild-eyed daughter: "But, man, the cold?"

Garth smiled. "Have you forgotten I told you that I wintered with the Eskimos at Coronation Gulf?"

"They have dog teams."

"Some of those teams were reared from wolf pups. I might experiment. There are several wolf families in the valley."

"You're stark mad! If you think you can—"

Mr. Ramill paused. He listened to what Huxby was muttering in his ear. His frown smoothed out, and he again favored Garth with the smile that did not go up as high as his shrewd eyes.

"Oh, well, my boy, if you're bound to risk your life in foolhardy adventuring, that's none of our business."

"Quite so," Garth agreed. "If our sixty-forty deal had not fallen through, it would have been your business to do the legal assessment work on the claim. But as things stand, I may as well put in the winter doing the work myself. The metal I sled out with my wolf team should pay enough to buy me a fair-sized freight plane."

The millionaire beamed. "Yes—ah—true!"

Garth smiled back at him. "By the way, I meant to let you discover for yourselves at Fort Smith the happy surprise I've had all along for you. But since you're so pleased already over my prospects, I'll let you into the secret right now."

"Secret—at Fort Smith?"

"Yes. I forwarded my papers by the southbound Bellanca before I had the pleasure of meeting you and Miss Ramill. My claim has been on record for the past four weeks or so."

Huxby glared with a sudden change from gloating to cold rage: "You lie! You were going out in your canoe."

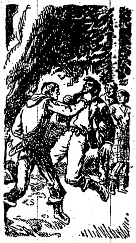
He was on his feet almost as soon as Garth. His fists swung in blows driven by all the force of his furious anger. Garth sidestepped both, and clipped in a hook to the jaw. Huxby dropped as if hit by a sledge. Yet it was not a complete knockout. After three or four seconds, he sat up, blinking like a dazed owl.

Garth had stepped back. He said: "Apologize, or get up and take what is coming to you."

Huxby stopped blinking. The daze cleared from his eyes. They took on their usual calculating look. He felt the beard on his sore jaw, and replied with cold deliberation: "I withdraw the term."

Arrogant as was the tone, the words were an unqualified apology. Garth turned to Lilith, who stood gazing at him with a peculiar hard glow in her blue eyes. He spoke as if nothing had happened:

"Some of the ashes are now cool enough for you to use, Miss Ramill. Rub them on as a mud paste till the potash cuts the grease, then scour with sand, and rinse. Better take your ashes in the blanket, and use it for protection while you do your laundering. The skeets and bulldog flies are swarming. You'll find a bit of sand beach just under that clump of spruce."



Garth Side-Stepped Both, and Clipped in a Hook to the Jaw.

Without a word of thanks, she dragged the blanket to the edge of the nearest outburnt fire and began brushing the fluffy gray wood ashes upon it with a spruce spray. Her father had been gazing thoughtfully at Garth. He took up his empty foxskin bag.

"Come on, Vivian. This is washday. Take Lilith's bag and get your potash."

The wolfskin knapsack, with its platinum alloy treasure, had been left attached to the mooring line of the canoe. There was no bag for Garth. He made one by opening the front of his buckskin shirt and hand-ladling wood ashes inside.

Lilith went over beyond the spruce thicket with her blanket-bagged ashes, Garth led Mr. Ramill and Huxby to the strip of sand below the beached canoe. There he showed them how to cheat the buzzing insect pests. Instead of stripping for his laundry work, he muddled his ashes and plastered the paste all over his body and on the inside and outside of his clothes.

He rubbed in the mess and gave the weak solution of potash lye time to act. After that came the rinsing. He waded out and sat down in the water up to his neck. Thus protected from the swarms of stingers, he stripped off one garment at a time, washed it clean of ashes, and tossed it upon the edge of the beach. Before coming out, he took a luxurious swim in the clear river water.

First Ramill and then Huxby rather gingerly copied Garth's method. Like him, both wound up with a swim. Neither, however, ventured far out into the vast slow flood of the Mackenzie.

With the landing came the comedy. The others ended their bathing before Garth. He tread water to watch them. Both had wrung out their clothes and flung them well up the beach. The moment they splattered ashore, the waiting swarms of blood-suckers buzzed to the feast.

MERCY PLANE WRECKED; FARMERS FIGHT DRIFTS

Sanborn.—An air plane called from Minneapolis to transport a Sanborn farm girl over impassable roads to a hospital for an immediate operation cracked up near Springfield and it was necessary to call out dozens of farmers who fought drifts for three hours to get the girl into town for treatment. The plane, piloted by Elmer Hinck and equipped with skis, missed its way passed over Sanborn, and flew to Lamberton. Regaining his bearings, the pilot followed the road back to Sanborn, but in landing failed to note a telephone pole and wires. The plane had its right wing torn off, and the propellor broken. Notified of the loss of the plane, farmers turned out to open the road for Miss Viola Pankonin, suffering with appendicitis. They succeeded in battling their way through the roads to Sanborn, where a car waited to take her to New Ulm. She immediately submitted to an operation there, and is making rapid recovery.

Public Ownership and Co-operative News Notes from Far and Near

FARMERS' MUTUALS DO BIG BUSINESS

One-half of all the farm buildings in the country are insured by farmers' mutual insurance companies, states the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. There were 1,831 such companies at the end of 1933, and they carried insurance totaling nearly 10½ billion dollars.

CO-OP SOCIETY OPENS A 5 AND 10

The Royal Arsenal Society, in the suburbs of London, has opened a "bazaar" store, similar to the familiar American 5 and 10. Articles priced 1 penny to 2 shillings sixpence (about 60 cents) are sold in this store, called the "Co-operative Economy Department." English urban co-ops are feeling the need of meeting the 5 and 10 type of competition.

SOCIETY MAKES NET INCOME OF OVER $19,000.

Waukegan, Ill.—Net income of $19,345.28 will be reported to the annual meeting of the Cooperative Trading Company to be held the evening of March 7 at the Finnish Temperance hall, 616 McAllister Ave. The net income is more than it has been for several years past. All the branches and departments were on a self-supporting basis during the last accounting period.

LAUNCH BIG POULTRY CO-OP IN NORTH DAKOTA

Williston N. D.—A large scale co-operative for both buying and marketing to serve 17 counties in northeastern Montana and northwestern North Dakota, is being launched. Called the Farmers Union Co-operative Association, it will first operate in the poultry field, supplying chicks, turkey poults, feeds, brooders and other equipment to its farmer-members, and marketing the output co-operatively.

This is reported to be the first cooperative project of its kind to receive financial aid from the Rural Resettlement Administration.

The potential membership is 30,000 farmers.

TRADE BETWEEN COOPERATIVES SPEEDED

London, England.—Regional International Cooperative Wholesale associations in Southeastern Western and Northern Europe loomed as an immediate possibility as a result of a recent series of conferences at Vienna, Brussels, and London. Wholesale cooperatives serving as clearing houses for trade between cooperatives in various countries in Europe have long been advocated by cooperative leaders as an important method of facilitating commerce on a non-profit basis.

The first venture of this type was organized by Scandinavian cooperatives several years ago when national organizations in Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden became joint owners of the Luma cooperative electric lamp factory in Sweden. The Scandinavian Cooperative Wholesale Society which was set up to administer the plant has already engaged in a number of other activities. Executives of the SCWS and the Cooperative Society, Manchester, met in London late in January to work out possibilities of closer association.

Representatives of four national wholesale societies in Southeastern Europe met in Vienna earlier in January to negotiate for a permanent regional wholesale society. Delegates from cooperatives in Poland, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Roumania, Czecho-slovakia, Austria and Hungary will meet later in the spring to complete details.

A conference of French, Belgian, Dutch and Swiss cooperative leaders in Brussels late in February explored the possibilities of closer relations in their economic relations, looking forward to the creations of a Western European Cooperative Wholesale. Twenty-seven national cooperative wholesale associations affiliated in the International Cooperative Wholesale Society did an international business of more than $200,000 000 in 1933. The creations of regional associations should greatly increase the volume of inter-cooperative trade.

EASTERN COOPERATIVE

Springfield, Mass.—The Eastern States Farmers Exchange, which last year completed a $300,000 addition to its cooperative feed mill in Buffalo added 6,000 farmers in eight Atlantic seaboard states to its membership in 1935. The 62,000 farmer-consumer members of the cooperative did a non-profit business of $14,067,533, according to the repotr of Quentin Reynolds, general manager, to the annual meeting of the exchange last week. This was an increase of 13.5 per cent over the purchases of the cooperative the previous year.

This week members of the cooperative will receive checks totaling approximately $100,000 as a direct return on savings. An additional fifty thousand dollars was voted to be set aside for further expansion of the cooperative. Savings returns in the 17 years of activities of the exchange have totaled well over $2,000,000. The Eastern States Exchange has extended its service to motor oil, paint, spray materials, binder twine, dairy supplies, flours and cereals and has set up 18 regional warehouses in addition to its headquarters in Springfield.

All Things DO NOT Come to Him Who Waits

Many of the glib sayings which roll so smoothly off our tongues are decidedly falacious,and none more so than the expression "All things come to him who waits." Very few things come to him who waits, and failure is the most frequent caller. In this work-a-day world you have to "go out and get it" if you wish to survive.
When it comes to "going out and getting it" there is no better way than through the printed word. Enclosures and pamphlets are silent salesmen drumming for you with every call of the mailman if you avail yourself of their services and advertising in your local newspaper is a sure-fire method of bringing business to your establishment.

Quit worrying because business is going past your door. Advertise in the Tri-County Forum and keep your cash register singing a merry tune of greater net returns.

State Forester Will Discuss Windbreaks

Farmers interested in getting first hand information on the establishment of windbreaks will have an opportunity to do so by attending the meeting to be held at the Hazel school at 8:00 on Tuesday, March 27th, says R. M. Douglass, County Agent.

Parker Anderson Extension Forester from University Farm will be present and will discuss the establishment of the standard windbreak and also the supplementing of existing native protection. Mr. Anderson will also discuss procurement of tree stock including the establishment of a small tree nursery and general care of the growing windbreak.

The drought has severely affected both native growth and artificial plantings, says Mr. Douglass. In many cases, groves have run their course and are dying a natural death. To be insured of needed protection for the farmstead in years to come, plantings should be started now.

FLOOD WATERS ENDANGER BIG SO. MINN. AREA

Two Hundred Lives Lost In Floods' Throughout The Country

COLD WEATHER MINIMIZES DANGER

Upper Reaches of Mississippi Reported to Register Slow Rise

Following hard on the heels of devastating floods in western North Dakota, the eastern and Atlantic seaboard states, the Mississippi and the Minnesota rivers started rising at a rapid rate this week endangering cities and towns thruout southern Minnesota.

Crest of the Minnesota river flood was surging towards Shakopee on Tuesday pushing the water higher in the lowlands and contributing to a sharp rise in the Mississippi which was near flood stage at Red Wing. Warnings were issued at St. Paul and residents of the low lands were moving to higher ground. Ice gorges in the Minnesota river were dynamited releasing flood waters and removing dangers at Mankato and points up the river.

One thousand men employed on the St. Paul barge terminal enlargement, WPA project were thrown out of work when the climbing waters of the Mississippi made construction work impossible. State WPA headquarters were ready to dispatch men to flood areas if needed

Colder weather on Wednesday, however, has reduced the immediate danger and the Minnesota registered an 11 inch drop at Mankato although some lowlands around Shakopee and Chaska were still under water. Tracks of the Chicago, Great Western railroad between Red Wing and Cannon Falls, under water since Sunday again appeared above the surface this morning.

Federal observers predict flood levels will be reached in the Mississippi valley between LaCrosse,

COUNCIL TRIES TO SETTLE OLD SERA ACCOUNTS

Committee Named to Confer With Mrs. Anna Dickie Olecon, St. Paul

Bills totalling about $1300 which have been in dispute for the past two years were under discussion by a joint meeting of the mayor, the council and former mayor E. L. Tungseth at the council chamber Friday evening.

The bills which were incurred by the SERA engineer Frisby in connection with the dredging of the Red Lake river in the fall of 1934, have been a source of much controversy because several members of the former council maintained that they had not been properly authorized by the council Former mayor E. L. Tungseth stated that in his opinion, they must have been authorized since some of them had been paid. Alderman Peter Myhrom former president of the council brought out that the work had been done at the instigation of the council and that if Frisby had not been "quick on the trigger" and secured action on the work, the city would in all probability have been faced with a water shortage during the winter of 1934-35

A committee composed of Mayor W. W. Prichard, former mayor E. L. Tungseth, City attorney Theo. Quale and alderman Carl Christofferson was named to go to St. Paul and confer with Mrs. Anna Dickie Oleson, chairman of the federal emergency council and are authorized to offer a fifty percent settlement on behalf of the city if the SERA will defray the balance.

New Quota For District WPA Set

With the coming of spring, Public Works Administration projects and those of other Federal Agencies are expected to function on a larger scale, a report from the Detroit Lakes WPA office this week states. This will remove some of the relief load which has been carried on through the winter by the Works Progress Administration.

With the transfer of WPA workers to PWA and other Federal Agencies projects, a new quota has been set for the various districts in the state. Private employment is also expected to take a number of relief workers, the report states. The new quota for the Seventh District, as of March 30th, has been set at 4,150. The district is 140 below the quota, according to figures compiled by J. B. Kovarik Supervisor of Employment, there being 3,825 relief and 185 non-relief workers now on the payroll. I norder that this transfer of workers will be properly carried out and the correct procedure followed, a conference of area engineers, NRS officials and district office staff members was held at Detroit Lakes last week, and the matter discussed with officials from the state office.

The annual Spring Exposition, sponsored by the Elmer J. Eklund Post of the American Legion closed Saturday night after three successful days, with large crowds in attendance to view the exhibits and enjoy the entertainment features of the program.

Miss Jane Marie Early's singing and dancing revue, "The Early Steppers of 1936", and the vaudeville acts presented on Friday and Saturday evening, combined to form a program of superior quality and distinction. The revue, composed of eight young ladies and eight youngsters, was something utterly new and unique in dancing and singing routines.

DEER - KILLING DOGS ON GAME RESERVE SHOT

Large Herd of Deer Apparently Coming Thru the Winter In Nice Shape

Leo J. Peyton of Ortonville has been assigned to this district as game warden by the conservation department and had as his first assignment the tracking down of dogs that have killed deer on the game reserve in Smiley township southeast of the city. Investigation disclosed that two bucks have been killed, one weighing about 175 pounds and the other around 200 pounds, Mr. Peyton stated. The dogs were located and the killer executed. There is a large herd of deer on the reserve, Mr. Peyton says, and they seem to have come thru the winter in good shape.

Mr. Peyton has also made a bird survey and done some bird feeding work. Some dead birds were found Mr. Peyton stated and he has sent them to the University for analysis to determine the cause of death. There appears to have been a loss in birds this winter due to exposure, or starvation but the loss does not exceed 15 per cent, Mr. Peyton said. Grouse and Hungarian partridge seem to be plentiful in this territory and there is also a large number of pheasants, especially south of here in the Plummer territory and east and south of Goodridge, Mr Peyton states.

WPL Hold an Open Forum at Meeting

One of the most interesting meetings of the winter was enjoyed by the workmens protective league at the court rooms on Monday evening when an open forum was conducted by Paul A. Harris at the invitation of the league. Mr. Harris' lecture followed the regular business meeting and after the talk the meeting was opened to questions which the speaker answered.

Several new members were accepted at the meeting.

E. E. Long, business agent for the league, states that more of the open forum meetings are being arranged for future meetings.

Mooney Witnesses Bare Nefarious Plot to Frame Labor Organizer

By Miriam DeFord

When the hearings reopened after two months' recess (except for one day when former District Attorney Brennan was on the stand), the petitioner by stipulation was allowed to present three more witnesses.

The first of these was a really remarkable character, George W. Grimmer, alias Honsberger, alias Anderson, who for many years was a labor spy for street car companies all over the United States, and who graduated from that to be president of the civil service commission of Los Angeles.

Grimmer was hired by the United States Railroads in 1906, with instructions from President Patrick Calhoun to join the carmen's union and "holler strike from the housetops". "We want to force a strike and lick hell out of them," Calhoun told him. As there was no fund to pay for this "special work" (Grimmer acted as a regular conductor as well), he was instructed to "hold back" fares to any sum "within decency". When the strike came, he was asked to take out the first night car on one line, and warned that "something might happen there might be a little explosion" He refused to take the job.

In 1916 Grimmer was again in San Francisco, and asked the new president of the United Railroads, Lillienthal, for a job. Lillienthal sent him to Melnotte McCants, assistant general manager. McCants told him he could use him. "We've got a number of no good men in this city," he said, "whom we want to run out of the state or across the bay" (Meaning to San Quentin). Mooney was one of those he named; another was Edward Vandeleur, now head of the Central Labor Council. Grimmer shadowed Mooney for a few days, but got nervous about the assignment. "Do you want to frame them?" he asked McCants. "Of course not", McCants answered sarcastically. "Nobody likes to hear the word 'frame.' We just want you to be at the same place where Mooney is, at the same time, if anything happens." Grimmer refused to go on with the assignment, and McCants gave him $15.00 and told him that was the last money he would ever get from the United Railroads.

On the day of the explosion he was on a California Street car and heard the blast, "I guess that's going to be pinned on Mooney" he remarked to the conductor and to the Inspector at the end of the line. About a week later, when he was on another car, three men came up to him and said, "You've been throwing up your guts about this case The best thing you can do is to beat it." Scared he left and went to Los Angeles.

In the 1907 strike Grimmer became acquainted with a strikebreaker, a half-breed Indian named Jos. Daugherty. This man had shot two or three persons who had tried to raid his car, and had "crawfished out of it." In 1920 Grimmer met Daugherty again in Los Angeles, very nervous, and expecting "to be shot or stabbed any minute." Grimmer asked him. "Who do you think pulled off that stunt at Steuart and Market? Mooney?" Daugherty put his hand on his shoulder, and said, "That — — — wouldn't have the guts. I could put my hand on the man's shoulder that pulled that stunt. Mooney had absolutely nothing to do with it." Daugherty was later murdered in Chicago, his head cut off. (This was confirmed by Chicago dispatches.)

The second witness was George Miller, now a Fresno insurance man, formerly a special policeman for the Southern Pacific. As such, he helped to hire 150 scabs for the 1917 United Railroads' strike. On the basis of this he struck the United Railroads for a job in 1919, and was taken to the same Melnotte McCants (now dead). McCants said to him one day, "Miller, Mooney and Billings are going to remain in prison as long as the United States can keep them there We know they're not guilty, but they're agitators, and cost us a million dollars in this strike." Clearly decided not to risk cross-examining Miller at all.

The third witness was Draper Hand, a former San Francisco police officer, one of the Bomb Bureau in 1916, one of the frame-up gang, who confessed to Fremont Older in front of Mayor (later Governor) James Rolph in 1920 Since then Hand has been in difficulties; he is now on parole on a grand theft conviction, and the probation officer tried to haul him up for not reporting regularly, in spite of the fact that he had been promised no harm would come to him if he testified in the Mooney case.

Hand's testimony was sensational, and he plainly enjoyed baiting Cleary. He told how he staged a "demonstration" of the Eilers Building roof scene with the witnesses, so as to synchronize their accounts of when the Mooneys came on the roof. At the end Assistant District Brennan said, "We have the wrong person—Mooney was up on that roof. We're going along the wrong line." Later Duncan Matheson came to Hand and told him to watch Brennan, it looked as if he had sold out to the other side.

Then he told about the Edeau women, about Mrs. Edeau's first story of being at Steuart and Market throughout, then how she came to the Bomb Bureau and said she really had been with her daughter in front of 721 Market and had seen "everything that Estelle Smith saw." Hand had already reported her first conversation; now Matheson told him to make a new report consolidating the two contradictory stories. This second report was produced in court, but Cleary said he could not find the first one. The vast probability is that it was long ago destroyed by the police or by Fickert's office

Hand told how Oxman had said to him, "Draper , don't you think they'll know we're lying?" and how John McDonald threatened if they did not get him a job to "spill everything". He related how Fickert told him to show Oxman Weinberg's auto, and how Oxman made him sit in it and hang his hand over the side to see if a man could hold a suitcase on the running board. He recounted how he took Mrs. Edeau to see Mooney, Billings, Weinberg and Nolan, and had them "identified" by calling each by name.

Asked if Older had given him any inducement to make his confession in 1920, he said, "Yes he told me I would feel better if I told the truth and helped to free a man who did not commit the crime when I knew who did do it." Cleary made no attempt to cross-examine him on this last provocative remark. Caught in a contradiction—he had said he did not encourage the Edeaus to claim the reward, whereas a letter was produced in which he had done so—he blandly replied, " Well, she committed perjury for the reward, why not pay her?"

The petitioner's case was then closed. Instead of putting Brennan on the stand again, his further testimony was postponed, and the state reopened its case by calling Goff. When the week's session ended Goff was still under direct examination. His testimony took the form of complete denial of every charge made against him by McoDnald and by all other Mooney witnesses. Every "identification" he claimed, was regular and positive—the Edeaus, McDonald, Vidovich, Estelle Smith, and all—and he was "very much surprised" when they picked out Mooney and Billings as the men they had seen.

A final interesting note on the week's proceedings; On one occasion Cleary refered to the charge of conspiracy against Fickert and his staff. John Finerty Mooney's lawyer, remarked that the conspiracy was still going on. Referee Shaw thereupon overruled an objection made by Finerty, and said sarcastically, "The conspiracy may go on."

Minnesota Honored In National Contest

Minnesota received more awards than any other state in the 1935 national waterfowl refuge contest sponsored by the More Game Birds in America Foundation, E V. Willard, commissioner of conservation, announced last week.

Four loving cups and six certificates of merit were awarded Minnesotans taking part in the contest. A certificate of merit was also awarded the Minnesota Conservation Commission and the division of game and fish for "outstanding work in encouraging the development of the program in Minnesota."

A total of 237 waterfowl refuges were entered in the contest, 28 or 11.8 per cent of them from Minnesota.

Individuals and organizations receiving loving cups were: Matoska Game refuge, White Bear; Embarrass Rod and Gun Club, Allen; Chisholm Chapter Izaac Walton League, Balkan; and Mora Chapter No. 70, Izaac Walton League, Arthur.

Fire Marshal Aids Farm Protection

The State Fire Marshal's Department has been stressing the need of protecting Minnesota farms from fire. The Fire Marshal Department took this matter up and has been working on it for the last twelve months. In a Work's Project the department has been making a County Fire Map for every county in the state, which maps are to be deposited with the County Auditor. In addition the departmant has been working with a few villages and cities and the surrounding townships seeking to have the adjoining townships around a town, having an organized fire department, subscribe jointly to the purchase of a piece of fire equipment to be housed in the town or village having an organized fire department, and which piece of farm fire fighting equipment shall be used for fighting farm fires. This piece of equipment is called a "water wagon", and carries 300 gallons of water, a booster pump, booster lines, ladders and pump for drawing water from cisterns, wells, stock tanks ponds, etc. This "water wagon" is capable, from the supply carried from the engine house, of throwing a stream for fifteen minutes While this stream is being thrown a bucket brigade can keep filling this tank.

This type of equipment is newly designed for farm fighting purposes. Its cost, when spread over an area of five or six townships is approximately $5.00 or $6 00 per farm, and it has a life of twenty to twenty-five years.

Under the plan worked out by the Fire Marshal Department, the town or village which desires to work out this plan calls in representatives of the surrounding town ships and a conference is had at which time the State Fire Marshal's office has its representatives present to outline the plan. The method of raising money is either by private subscription of each of the farmers benefited, or by assessment levied by the electors of the town meeting against the benefited properties under, Mason's Minnesota Statutes of 1927, Section 1027, Sub-section 1-10.

"The State Fire Marshall Department made a survey of Minnesota fire equipment in connection with Works Project No. 702 and found that there was need of a rural fire fighting program based on the selection of key towns and villages to house modern equipment for fighting farm fires," said Dewey W. Johnson, Deputy Commissioner of Insurance and State Fire Marshal, in charge of the Fire Marshal Department. "It is apparent that with the growth and development of diversified farming in Minnesota that each year finds more of Minnesota's wealth placed in farm buildings and equipment, and, since a great portion of Minnesota's citizens live on the land, there is need for such a farm fire fighting program as this department is now advancing. We hope that when this program is carried out to its fullest extent that every town or village having fire equipment in Minnesota will have worked out a plan with its adjoining and neighboring townships so that a piece of farm fire fighting equipment will be housed and manned by the local village or city department subject to the fire calls of neighboring farmers. This plan is now being worked out in Milan, New Prague and Jordan, and was taken up at their annual meeting, and votes were taken authorizing the town boards to act jointly with the other townships and key city or village to acquire such equipment. This program carried out logically will cut the cost of insurance to the farmers through the Township Farm Mutuals, and will be of great aid to the Township Farm Mutuals in protecting the property from fire which they are now insuring."

Back Taxes May Be Paid Over Ten Years

Delinquent taxpayers who had given up hope of being able to redeem their property will find in the new "instalment payment plan", passed at the recent special legislative session, a "lifeline" that might save them according to a statement from the Minnesota Taxpayers Association.

Under the new law, the taxpayer can enter into a contract with the state to refinance his old taxes for a period of ten years, under the following plan:

Pay one-tenth of the back taxes each year for ten years.

Pay all current taxes each year during that period.

The delinquent must make a contract for this kind of settlement before November 1, 1937, but not thereafter.

The agreement, if strictly adhered to for ten years, would cancel all penalties and accumulated interest now due on back taxes. This would cancel the confessed judgment and original judgments.

The purpose of the new law is to bring in these outstanding delinquencies, and to encourage the taxpayer to pay up his old accounts The delinquent can regain title to his land; he can clean up all these back taxes by systematically dividing the payments over a long period, and he will have a smaller amount to pay because of the cancellation of all accumulated penalties.

Should a large percentage of tax payers take advantage of the leniency offered in this law it conceivably would help to bring down current tax levies, since the total normal delinquency would be materially reduced in the state, the Minnesota Taxpayers Association points out.

If the law is not a success, it likely will be because no provision was made to acquaint the public with the provisions of the law, and thus delinquents might not be informed of the matter. Public officials, the press and county taxpayers' association have an opportunity here to assist in bringing the matter to the attention of the public, to help the delinquents, and to get the benefit that would come if all these old bills were paid up, the State Association points out.

DESTROYING TO MAKE PROSPERITY

The question has been asked us, "In view of the fact that the San Francisco earthquake and fire made a cycle of prosperity in California and the devastating floods in the east will tend to make prosperity there, why didn't it make for prosperity when the farmers left wheat and cotton acres idle?"

By this time most people are convinced that reducing production does not improve conditions, in spite of the fact that the reduction of wheat and cotton production did slightly improve prices of those commodities. Still many people are yet unable to understand why curtailing production has not cured the depression.

The answer to the question is of course that the government started at the wrong end. Curtailing production of raw materials will not make for additional work, which again makes an increased buying power and therefore does no more to bring back prosperity than setting fire to an oil well or blowing up a coal mine. In fact it has the opposite effect. By throwing men out of employment it adds to the acuteness of the depression by still farther curtailing the buying power of the masses.

On the other hand, the San Francisco earthquake brought a splurge of activity cleaning up the debris and erecting new buildings, thus putting more people to work and increasing their buying power. The devastating floods in the east at the present time will have the same effect upon business conditions.

We do not suggest a destruction of any kind. We believe that there are other methods far more rational than to destroy to make times better. But we point out that the government started at the wrong end with their program of destruction if they wished to make it effective. Instead of destroying raw materials they should have destroyed finished products. If they had destroyed capital goods and consumers goods, buildings, machinery, mills, factories, bread, clothes and so on. That would have brought about better times because people would have to be put back to work to produce more. As we said before we do not suggest it but we do point out that like a war which destroys capital and consumers goods, it would produce a temporary splurge of better times.

Now that it has been made clear to them we wonder if the New Dealers will consider destroying our surplusses of manufactured products, by war or otherwise, or if they will consider making changes in the economic set-up that will make destruction of anything unnecessary.

HAVING A WEAK MIND WE MUST HAVE A STRONG BACK

President Roosevelt has asked congress for another appropriation of $1,500,000,000 in order to continue the WPA projects and provide subsistence-wage labor for relief clients. As was expected, the Big Business press bewails and bemoans this "extravagant and useless expenditure of public funds" and berates the president and congress, whom it apparently foresees as making the appropriation in "playing for votes."

The inference seems to be that if members of congress and the president did not have to go back to the people for re-election they would spend less money for relief. They would be more responsive to the wishes of Big Business. So thank God that we still have the ballot. It should be an indication of the value of free speech, free press assemblage and our right of popular selection of officials.

When Big Business bemoans the fact that much of the relief money is spent uselessly, for projects that are of no immediate nor permanent value to society; serving only the purpose of providing a pittance for the starving millions, however, it is well to bear in mind that the Big Business press has vehemently opposed every effort to use such funds for projects that could be of permanent benefit to society. The TVA is opposed because it will cut into the revenue of the power trust, slum clearance and construction of workers homes is opposed because it would hurt the real estate speculators, putting idle men in idle factories is opposed because it would deplete the labor supply and manufacture in competition with private factories. Every constructive enterprise suggested has been opposed by Big Business.

Therefore the trooping appropriations for relief will continue. Three billions, five billions, one and a half billions, and again three or four billions they will continue until the last pillar of a rotten social order has been washed away and Big Business exists no more to oppose sane and rational reconstruction.

For from those that have will be taken, all that they have, since from those that have not, nothing can be taken, except their misery and insecurity. The roll of those who have is continually shrinking and the roll of those who have not is growing continually larger. Big Business, judging from the business statistics, is sitting pretty now, but its foundations are being swept away and having had a weak mind it will need a strong back when the final reckoning comes.

TELEPHONE BOOTH IS OUT THIS YEAR

We have it on good authority that a report to the effect that the Pennington county republicans have rented the Evelyn Hotel telephone booth for their county convention is erroneous. It was hard to believe, we admit, we couldn't understand how they could all four crowd in at one time.

The democrats are taking no chances of being overcrowded this year, so instead of using the telephone booth as in former years, they have secured the county court room. Anyone willing to admit he voted for Roosevelt will be seated as a delegate, the convention call states. Rugged, old-fashioned honesty is the price of participation.

OR A MEDAL IN LEATHER

There is reported to be a movement on foot to get postmaster general Farley to have another special stamp struck off in commemoration of the efficiency of Thief River Falls in cleaning the snow and ice from the streets.

AS THOUGH IT MADE ANY DIFFERENCE

The chief state grain inspector is nettled because the Hennepin county farmer-laborites said he is a republican and not a farmer-laborite. To prove they are wrong, he wrote a long letter and sent it to the local republican paper.

THE LIE ABOUT WEAKENING GOVERNMENT CREDIT

(American Guardian)

What a lot of liars our financiers are! In view of what happened in the bond market a few days ago, I do not see how those financiers who have been warning us in the press and from the platform of the "financial abyss" towards which the administration was tumbling can face the people in the coming months.

The Guardian's Financial Reporter had occasion before to point out that the warnings regarding government securities were all hooey. The financial interests have to support such securities or they would bring on a crash that would ruin themselves. In addition to this, government securities are still the safest investment in the country.

The other day the Treasury offered new securities to the amount $1,809,000,000.00. Not only was this offering over-subscribed nearly FIVE times, but already outstanding federal obligations have gone to an all-time peak when it is the usual course for existing federal securities to go down a little on a new issue of such size as the one offered the other day. In view of this exhibit what becomes of the claim that there is a "lack of confidence" in the financial policy of the government, or that the money classes fear "monetary tinkering", as one paper put it? What becomes also of all the slush turned out in the columns of the newspapers and in the financial press about government extravagance?

It would be interesting to find out how many members of the Destroyers of Liberty League subscribed to those issues because they wanted an absolutely safe investment in a government whose credit they have been trying to tear to pieces.

THE CO-OPERATIVE YOUTH COURSES

(Co-operative Builder)

The Co-operative Youth Courses, a 4-week school in the history, principles and practices of the Consumers' Co-operative movement, are to be held at Co-operative Park, near Brule, Wis., beginning June 14.

Young people from the entire Lake Superior region, and perhaps from an even wider territory will come to the Park for this school. They will find a beautiful woodland spot, on the sparkling Brule river—a location unexcelled for a month of combined study and recreation. They will find, according to present plans, new living quarters built specifically for their comfort. They will also find the ablest instructors to be had in this district.

All of which means that this school offers a unique opportunity to youth. Many should be eager to attend.

But the school also means a great opportunity for the local communities from which these youth come. For somewhere in every community are young men and women who have the capacity to be future leaders of Co-operation. Sought out and sent to the school, these youth will return as human dynamos, energized and fitted to help put the Co-operative program across with irresistible power in their communities.

It is not just a "nice thing" for co-ops to support these courses and send students; it is an urgent necessity, especially at this time when the movement is growing like a lusty colt—who is to harness and drive the colt? Who but those who are youth today?

If jobs were plenty and available youth scarce, the holding of these courses might be unprofitable. But such is far from the case. Able youth are plenty, everywhere, wanting to fit themselves for just this kind of work. Are we to let young talent rot, or use it?

ISSUES WILL BE CLEAR-CUT

(Minnesota Leader)

Congressman Theodore Christianson has injected himself into the senatorial contest.

Governor Floyd B. Olson will make the race for the senate on the Farmer-Labor ticket. Nothing could please him more than to have Christianson as his chief opponent. The issue will be clearcut.

The Leader believes that Mr. Christianson is willing to be judged by his record and by the platform of the Republican party, whose candidate he will be.

That being the case we want to call attention to the stand that Christianson has taken on important issues as a member of congress. Here's how he voted:

On work relief, "No."
Repeal of income tax publicity, "Aye."
Amendment broadening TVA, "No."
Tax on the wealth bill "No."
Soldiers' bonus, "No."

Farmer-Labor Congressmen Lundeen, Buckler and Kvale voted the opposite way to Christianson on all these measures. Governor Olson would have voted as did the F-L congressmen had he been in congress.

Mr. Christianson has stated that he will conduct his campaign on the basis of issues and not on personalities. That is fine. The Farmer-Labor party has always conducted its campaigns on that basis. It is anxious to do so again.

The cost of drunken driving in the United States during 1935 was nearly $100,000,000 more than the amount received by the Government in internal revenue from the liquor traffic.—American Business Men's Research Foundation.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelson

Neutrality

On August 31, 1935 the President approved a neutrality resolution, prohibiting the export of arms, ammunition and implements of war to belligerents. It also authorized the executive to warn citizens of this country against traveling as passengers on vessels of any belligerent except at their own risk.

The resolution was hurriedly drawn and passed at about the time hostilities broke out between Italy and Ethiopia. It was designed as a temporary measure to run until February 29, 1936, by which time it was expected permanent legislation could be passed.

* * * *

What with Haille and Benito in each other's hair, Herr Hitler puffing out his chest and trying to look like a combination of Bismarck and Napoleon, and China and Japan glaring slant-eyed at each other, our legislative gentlemen lost no time, when Congress convened, in turning their attention to the troublesome subject of neutrality

* * * *

Though it didn't at first, look particularly troublesome. On the contrary, it appeared to be a rather simple matter. For all seemed agreed that even if toes were stepped upon somewhat here and there, everything needful would be done to assure that never again would we permit ourselves to be drawn into any outside squabbles.

We had saved the world for democracy once; and if it didn't have sense enough to stay saved, it could, for all we cared, walk eastward into the Atlantic until its hat floated!

Not only were we going to have a neutrality law which would cover every probable contingency; but it would have so many teeth in it that there'd be a few extra sets to sling on behind as spares!

For a couple of months or so neutrality talk raised more smoke here in Washington that a Mud Lake peat fire.

* * * *

And then, with surprising suddenness, all the clamor died down. Tamely and meekly, Congress abandoned the proposed legislation and contented itself with extending, until May 1, 1937, the temporary neutrality law already in force. And that law it is conceded, has more holes in it that a Swiss cheese.

True, there were a couple of additional provisions tacked on—that loans may not be made to belligerents, nor their bonds sold in this country. This however, was already covered in a law passed some years ago which prohibited loans to nations who are in default on debts to us. And all of them fall in that category.

Nothing was said about export of army trucks, copper, oil, brass cotton or scrap iron . . . And modern warfare requires these as much as it needs guns and shells.

* * * *

There were four senators—Borah, Vandenberg, Thomas and Johnson—who did more than anybody else to defeat this progressive measure . . Thomas, of Oklahoma, was the ringleader. He held forth in a four-hour tirade against the bill. The reason for his opposition is easy to understand—though he was careful, of course, to let no hint of it escape him. Oklahoma is an oil state. It wasn't that Thomas loved neutrality less. It was merely that he loved oil more!

Vandenberg comes from Michigan, with its extensive automobile manufacturers and its copper and iron mines. He knows on what side his political bread is buttered!

Johnson of California, is also under the grave suspicion that he has oil in his whiskers. His state is one of the leading producers.

Borah's stand is not surprising. It is quite in keeping with his past record. He has consistently posed as a great liberal . . . and almost as consistently voted with the reactionaries in favor of special privilege.

Then, finally, there were the various Italian organizations which flooded Congress with letters and telegrams, to say nothing of the sly but intensive lobbying of eastern industrial interests

* * * *

Congress may not be blamed too much, for organized propaganda is hard to combat. It can easily enough be made to sound like the voice of the whole land.

Those inclined to be critical of the legislators have but to remember back to the hysteria during the World War, carefully built up by newspaper propaganda, and designed, by those whose interest it served, to drag us into the conflict

And we shall be dragged in again, by the same means, if selfishness and greed, which defeated the proposed neutrality bill, are to continue to govern.

On Finding God

(From Kagawa's Meditations)

God dwells among the lowliest of men. He sits on the dust-heap among the prison convicts. With the juvenile delinquents He stands at the door, begging bread. He throngs with the beggars at the place of alms. He is among the sick. He stands in line with the unemployed in front of the free employment bureaus.

Therefore, let him who would meet God visit the prison cell before going to the temple. Before he goes to church let him visit the hospital. Before he reads the Bible let him help the beggar standing at his door.

If he visits the prison after going to the temple, does he not by so much delay his meeting with God? If he goes first to the church and then to the hospital, does he not by so much postpone beholding God? If he fails to help the beggar at his door and indulges himself in Bible-reading, there is a danger lest God, who lives among the mean, will go elsewhere. In truth he who forgets the unemployed forgets God.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

By Ben C. Hagglund

"Life Becomes Better!
Life Becomes Happier!"

The Christmas Season in Russia far from being a dull affair, as most people might imagine, was exuberant this year, according to recent dispatches. The occasion was made a sort of paean of rejoicing for the recent advances along all Soviet fronts, in engineering, manufacturing, transportation, and the like.

Christmas trees sprouted everywhere; twenty two large ones lighted the six huge ice rinks in Gorky Park in Moscow, TIME reports; and on these rinks the skaters disported themselves beneath huge banners which proclaimed in huge letters, "Life becomes better! Life becomes happier!"

It was also a season of house parties, masquerade balls, and general reunions, thus proving that a person could have a good time even if he lived in Russia.

Such a thing would have no significance if Hearst papers, and other agencies more subtle, had not been injecting the deadly virus of gloom and terror of the Russian scene into the American public consciousness. To the charge of starvation Russia shows a surplus of food; to the charge of lack of manufactured goods, Russia last year finished a manufacturing program which stepped up the standard of living 20 percent, with plans to surpass that of any country in the world within the next few years

With falling standards everywhere else, the Russian scene presents a truly remarkable progress. That is the only spot on earth where there is truth in the bold assertions, "Life becomes better! Life becomes happier!"

The Fate of Genius

Vincent van Gogh (1853-1890), of Holland and England, was recently signally honored, when his paintings were removed from the Modern Museum of Art at New York, after having been gaped at by 123,339 persons—a record. One of his paintings sold for $80,000 last year, and others command almost as much. . .

. . . Go back over half a century, and see Vincent van Gogh as he was during his "university days"—learning the stuff of which he painted. His first passion was ministery. Getting a call in a Flemish settlement near the Saar region, he went to preach to coal miners. But he found their condition so miserable that he concluded before he could bebefit them spiritually he must help their physical status somewhat. The logical conclusion was that Vincent van Gogh the cleric, organized one of the first unions in the Saar basin.

The desperate miners went on strike and remained so for several months. When the church discovered what Van Gogh was, it discharged him, so that he had to live off the charity the miners could show him. After a long period the miners were starved into submission, Van Gogh was forced to plead for a truce, and the miners returned to work, their condition no better than when they first went on strike. This failure was typical of all such early struggles that were only local in character

Embittered by this experience and nearly dead from malnutrition, Van Gogh bummed his way to Paris, where he cleaned spittoons and did other odd jobs for a living. Then he taught music, but always failed to make a decent living. At intervals he worked on his "brilliant, swirling canvases"—but his paintings were usually done in a frenzy, when nothing could stop expression—not even poverty and misery.

He sold some of his work at ruinously low prices—and those who purchased them did it sometimes as an act of charity. From such sales of his paintings, he earned during his lifetime not over $80, figured in American money.

After struggling along thus bitterly for years, one day he went out and put a bullet through his head. . .

. . . And in 1935, 123 339 people gaped at his brilliant creations, paying absurd sums for the privilege of owning some of them. It makes one want to laugh, if he thinks—or cry, if he feels.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

Ideas of our "rights" may lead to wrongs.

Has not this happened to woman in her fight for her political, social and economic "rights?".

Economically, woman has drifted into a war with man and succeeded in putting thousands of youth and men in the unemployment army

Socially, woman has drifted into apeing the vices of men.

Politically, woman has by no means increased her independence of thought or action, or rendered a better service to the life of the nation. Indeed, the average woman's vote is but a duplicate of the vote of the man in whom she is most interested.

Further, politics is not an uplifting influence and in the average community, the average woman submits to that influence.

What reflection of improvement is there in society since woman won all for which their "rights" leaders fought, and more?

Woman's highest "rights" are esteem and respect given her by man and an opportunity to attain education and develop individual talent for the purpose of giving a commendable service to home and family community and nation.

'Tis tragic for a woman to fight to possess the privileges of both man and woman.

Mr. Editor:

In an editorial some time since you mentioned some efforts by yourself and others to get the F-L convention last year to place on its program a recommendation that school districts and municipalities be given the right to borrow money from the federal government for cost of minting printing and accounting.

In this matter you are on the right road to economic justice for the American people. It is insane to class the nations money as common merchandise. At present the nations money and merchandise may be sold by anyone who has enough money to start a store or a bank. When I need merchandise I go to a store which sells what I want and pay the profit it asks for handling. If I need money I go to a bank and buy the use of it by paying the banker the profit (interest) he wants for handling that money. Money, then, is placed in the same class as merchandise. This is absolutely wrong, because money can only be made by the central government of a nation and is therefore national in origin and functions and should therefor neither be controlled or sold by private persons or private institutions. Money is made to represent values of all kinds of merchandise bought or sold among the people That is the only function it should have. For that reason it is made in small pieces of paper or metal so as to be of the most convenience to the citizens. The very theory of a nations money then plainly suggests that no private person or private institution should have any right to control, limit, sell for profit, or get any special privilege in getting money from the central government for speculative purposes such as is now done on boards of trade in our big cities.

Our banking system is at present classed as private institutions but in practice they function as one of the most important parts of the government The nations money is not loaned directly to any private citizen but is handed over to the private banks for them to use as merchandise for profit. The citizens have to buy the money they need from the bankers. Consequently the richest people of our nation have turned into the banking business because it gives them such a good opportunity to borrow money from the government for the cost of minting, printing, and accounting—and to loan it out to the citizens at a big rate of interest.

They (the banks) get the government to establish scientific bureaus where hundreds of learned scientists study and experiment to find out the best way to make all kinds of steel, all kinds of food stuffs for canning, etc., and the government pays the salaries. And then when our strong central government gets short of money to pay all the salaries the big bankers say: "You cannot use your own money to pay your debts with, you have to borrow money from us. We can let you have all the money you need for only twice as big interest as we pay you; you got to keep in the vaults your nine billion dollars of gold and some two billions of silver to protect OUR money from deflation". And at this point "Uncle Sam" is as poor as a common tramp. The editor of the Tri-County Forum "has more money to loan to citizens of a school district and municipalities than poor Uncle Sam at Washington. My advice to you Mr. Editor, is: try again with your friends to get the F-L state convention this week to see plainly the miserable situation Uncle Sam is in in this money matter. Try to get the F-L party to say on their program: "Production and money for use, not for profit".

A. K. LOCKREM.

Editor, Tri-County Forum
Dear Friend:

When the Supreme Court of the United States ruled out the AAA, they laid the foundation for the biggest legalized steal in the history of our nation. A news item in the associated press under date of March 10th, told how the bakers of the Twin Cities had started suit before the three federal judges to regain from the Minneapolis millers the processing tax they had paid on flour. This was denied them by the judges, and I can see some justice in that, but later the judges ruled that the impounded taxes belong to the milling companies. Eight millers from Minneapolis and one each from New Ulm and Lake City collected $12,127,631 back of the impounded processing taxes. If this was not a raw deal, what was it?

We took the matter up at our farmer-labor convention at Warren on March 16th and one of the delegates said this money will be used for a republican campaign fund. And I believe he was right at that. We passed a resolution condemning the action of the court as unjust and unfair. We feel that the tax was paid by all the people and hence should be paid to the government for the benefit of all the people.

This is not the first time that our republican friends have made the taxpayers of Minnesota pay their campaign expenses. I can remember back in 1912, when our republican legislature passed a law where the townships were to elect delegates to the republican county convention. In Viking, at the town meeting they elected Mr. C L. Rud and yours truly as delegates from Viking township, and that is the only time I have ever attended a republican county convention. Well, the chairman named A. B. Nelson of Warren and yours truly as credential committee and as they all looked good to us, we seated all present. I believe that the legislature must have heard from home, as that was the last time were elected delegates to the republican county convention and paid their expenses out of public funds.

The northwest farmers have been advised many times to farm less and raise more hell. I have never subscribed to that idea, but in this case I believe it would be justified. Now we all realize that it is quite impossible to return the processing tax to the people who paid it in the first place, hence the court should have turned it to the government for the good of all our people, and if they could not see their way in doing this then the court should turn it to some good purpose like the highway departments of the 48 states to build roads with, or, to our schools so it could at least serve some useful purpose to all the people.

Now I would ask everyone to help to arouse public opinion against this legalized steal. Write your friends talk it over with your neighbors, pass resolutions at your meetings and conventions, write to your paper, and try in any way or manner to help raise a big strong public opinion, as that is good medicine for corrupt judges.

Very truly yours,
G. A. SUSTAD

Danger of Floods Less Says Olson

There will be no unusual flood danger in Minnesota this spring unless heavy rains fall during the next few weeks, according to Walter Olson, director of the division of drainage and waters.

Comparatively brief thaws followed by freezing have prevented heavy run-off conditions and the flood hazard is not as acute at present as it was last year at this time, Mr. Olson said.

The flood danger is not over, however, Olson pointed out. Warm rains may bring about flood conditions in the southwestern part of the state. Northern Minnesota is in no danger, according to Olson.

RUBBER CHECK PASSER IS FREE WITH OTHERS MONEY

Park Rapids—The gentle pastime of passing "rubber checks" in Park Rapids resulted in retiring from circulation—at least temporarily—of one R. C. Niemo, who claims to hail from Hutchinson Mr. Niemo was a free spender. In the short space of twelve hours after arriving in Park Rapids he disposed of more than $30 of other people's money, and had only seventy-five cents left to jingle in his pocket when officers of the law took him in tow. Official charges were placed against him for issuing checks on a bank in which he had no funds. Niemo admits that he had no money in the bank, the Hutchinson bank also admits it, and several local business places in Park Rapids have written evidence. Mr. Niemo cashed a $5 check at a pool hall and later came back for ten dollars more. His technique was good. The five-dollar check was altered by writing a figure one in front of the figure five, and adding "teen" to the "five". Encouraged by the ease of this operation, Mr. Niemo hastened to play his lucky streak, and in quick succession cashed five dollar checks at a cafe and two filling stations. Other checks have not come to light, but police believe there were other victims.

HARD WORK

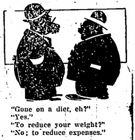
The Sunday school teacher requested the children to bring something toward the missionary fund, but stipulated that each child should do some kind of work to obtain it. When the day arrived for the money to be handed in the teacher asked one small boy what he had done to earn the sixpence that he had given.

"I got it from my father," replied the boy.

"But that isn't work," said the teacher.

"Well," replied the boy, "if you knew my father you'd think it was."

CUT AND SLASH



"Gone on a diet, eh?"
"Yes."
"To reduce your weight?"
"No; to reduce expenses."

In the Same Vein

"No," said the schoolboy to his friend, "I certainly do not believe in brevity in letter-writing. It once let me down very badly."

"How was that?" asked his companion.

"I wrote home to my father like this: 'No mon, no run, your son.'"

"Yes, and what did your father write back?" asked the other.

"'How sad, too bad, your dad,'" the schoolboy explained.

Big Saving on Shoe Bills

An Ozark backwoods woman had gone barefoot so long the soles of her feet were almost as tough as shoe leather itself. She was standing in front of the fireplace one evening when her husband addressed her:

"You'd better move yo're foot a mite, Maw, you're standin' on a live coal."

Looking down nonchalantly, she replied: "Which foot, Paw?"

Getting First News

"What are your reasons for wanting to be appointed postmaster of your village? The pay isn't much."

"No," replied Farmer Corntossel. "But I kind o' thought as long as Si Simlin had been gettin' first go at our postal cards fur years, it was only fair for me an' ma to have our turn at theirs."

Extra Time

Teacher—Now, James, if your father can do a piece of work in one hour and your mother can do it in one hour, how long will it take them to do it together?

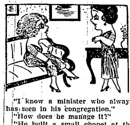
James—It would take three hours—including the time they wasted arguing about it.

Conversation

"Do you ever talk back to your wife?"

"Just a little," said Mr. Meekton; "enough to make her aware that I have not gone to sleep."

IF AND WHEN



"I know a minister who always has men in his congregation."

"How does he manage it?"

"He built a small chapel at the eighteenth hole and they attend after the game!"

Where's the Ball Game?

Boss—Say, what does this mean? Some one called up, said you were sick, and that you couldn't show up today.

Employee—Ha! Ha! The joke's on him. He wasn't supposed to call up until next Friday.

Lucky Coincidence!

Rufus—Did you hear about the man who was murdered last night for his money?

Goofus—Yes. Wasn't it lucky that he didn't have a cent on him at the time?—Pathfinder Magazine.

News-Reel

Excited Boy—Quick, my father's being chased by a bull!

Druggist—Good heavens! What can I do about it?

Father Speaks

"Father, what do you mean by a gentleman farmer?"

"A gentleman farmer, my son, is one who seldom raises anything but his hat."

Give Me Time

Teacher—Bobby, do you know the population of Chicago?

Bobby—Not all of them, Miss Shaw, we've only lived here three years.

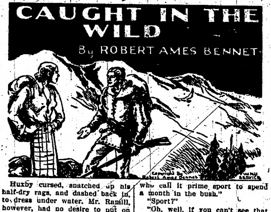
CAUGHT IN THE WILD

By ROBERT AMES BENNET



Copyright by Robert Ames Bennet WNU Service

Huxby cursed, snatched up his half-dry rags, and dashed back in, to dress under water. Mr. Ramill, however, had no desire to put on wet clothes. He beat at the zizzing pests with his tattered union suit. It enabled him to get into the leather trousers and coat without being stung more than half a hundred times.

Garth's mirth was mixed with admiration for the mine investor's nerve. Along with this he felt a glow of satisfaction over the results of what his rigorous training had done for the once-soft millionaire. Though still heavy-set, the portly gentleman had become something of an athlete in appearance. His flabby muscles had been hardened; his loose jowls were now firm. His paunch had disappeared.

"My word, sir," Garth sang out, "you look fit for the football squad. That should be worth more to you than a dozen platinum claims. At least, you might toss me my buckskins."

Mellowed by the bath and swim to a temporary return of friendliness, the millionaire chuckled and came down the beach to fling the sodden garments out to their owner. His loitering afterwards may have been for Huxby. Yet he went back to the dead fires with Garth, when the engineer muttered something about having dropped his penknife.

As the two disappeared over the top of the ice-gouged bank, Huxby sprang to open the wolfskin knapsack. From it he snatched out a piece of rancid bear-cub fat, a clip of pistol cartridges, and his "lost" automatic.

With swift, purposeful movements, he rubbed the fat on the rusty pistol and began working the mechanism. It jammed repeatedly. But as the sun-melted fat soaked the rust, the action became normal.

Still quick yet unhurried, he loaded the clip into the hollow butt and slid back the outer barrel to throw a cartridge into the breech.

As was of course to be expected Lilith Ramill had not returned from her own dip and wood-ashes laundering. Garth sat down beside the tin cup and little aluminum pot to mend a rip in his buckskin trousers.

Still in a friendly mood, but with shrewd calculation in his eyes, Mr. Ramill stretched out on his back in the long grass beside Garth.

"Well, young man, it appears that the game is played out. The joke on us is that you had the cards stacked. A cold deck, and no stakes up."

Garth differed: "Why not put it according to the facts, sir? I offered a square deal—a straight business proposition. The placer was in on that. Had I not sent out my papers for record, I would have had no legal claim to offer in my bargaining."

"Why—er— But when I refused your terms, and you refused mine, you said you preferred to play out the game."

"My game," Garth qualified; "not yours. It was you and Huxby who thought you had the cards stacked to win."

"But—your game? You had the placer clinched. Why not have said so at once, or at least there at the lake when you turned the tables on us? I might have accepted your terms. At least we could have flown out together, instead of going through all these weeks of privation and hardship."

The last words won an amused glance from Garth.

"Hardship—privation? You must know several fellow millionaires who call it prime sport to spend a month in the bush."

"Sport?"

"Oh, well, if you can't see that side of it, just recall yourself as you were when I had to hoist you out of the monoplane cabin."

That held the millionaire for a long moment. Then—

"Admitting how much I've benefited from your health cure, Doctor Garth, your methods have done my future son-in-law no good. As for my daughter, to drag a delicately nurtured lady into the dirt and privations and dangers of your raw wilds—"

"Delicate!" Garth cut in. "Do you know of anyone more hard? The point in her case is that she was only a brittle, harsh alloy. Now she's at least partly tempered into true steel. I had hopes of still better results from the both of you. But hate and treachery blacken the blood."

At the bitter statement, the millionaire flushed with anger. He started to turn over on his side to frown at Garth. The movement drew Garth's glance. Above a clump of wild currants, less than ten paces distant, he glimpsed the top of Huxby's hat and the outthrust muzzle of the automatic.

As Garth ducked forward, the pistol blared. Garth pitched down on his face. At the same instant, startled by the shot, Mr. Ramill jerked up on his elbow. The long grass had hidden him. Huxby could not have known that his partner was lying so close beside Garth.

In the excitement of the moment, he must have thought he had missed his kill and that Garth was bounding up again. He instantly pulled the trigger a second time. Knocked over by the shock of the bullet, the millionaire sprawled across the flaccid body of Garth.

Even as the roar of the second shot dinned in his ears, the killer saw what he had done. The pistol dropped from his paralyzed hand.

Before he could recover his wits, Lilith burst screaming from the spruce thicket. Half clad, wet hair flying, she dashed forward to fling herself down on her bare knees beside her father. Under the partly washed off coat of mosquito dope, his face was the same sallow gray as Garth's.

She looked up, her eyes black with horror. Huxby had risen to his feet. He was advancing, once more cool. She flung out a forbidding hand.

"Stop! Keep away! You—murderer!"

His lips tightened. "You're mad, darling—clear off your head. I shot to save your father, not at him. No, listen—you must listen to me! The d—d roughneck attacked your father—with the knife—had him down. At my first shot he dodged. I thought I missed. Your father sprang up just as I fired again. It's the truth."

"Truth!" she cried—"truth! You've killed them—both!"

Huxby advanced with wary quickness. But at sight of the two men he had shot, he thrust his coat-hidden pistol into its sheath. All the back of Garth's sideward turned head was a crimson blotch. What need of wasting powder on a man shot through the head?

Mr. Ramill's wound gave him no less satisfaction, though for an exactly opposite reason. The bullet had struck high up on the shoulder blade, between neck and arm. Huxby pulled the thickset body from under Lilith and opened the front of the leather coat. The steel-jacketed bullet had drilled clean through and come out below the collarbone.

"Look!" he shouted his relief. "Your father—he's not killed, only knocked out. The wound's not serious, so high up through the chest. Same way one of my classmates was shot by a hold-up. Take hold. We'll get him into the canoe and make a quick run down across to the refueling post. That fellow Tobin will have a medical kit."

The pulling of her father from under her had let the girl down upon the body of Garth. Huxby's eager assurance roused her from the semi-swoon. She struggled partly up, to peer at her father, her hands braced upon Garth's lax side.

Even as she gazed, the gray of her father's face became less ghastly. But in place of the smile of relief for which Huxby looked, she sprang up to flare at him in another outburst of denunciation:

"Murderer! Liar! There's his knife where I left it. He did not have it! Liar! Sneak! He did not attack Dad. But you—you crawled up and shot him—without warning!"

Huxby dropped his mask.

"What of it? The d—d wood louse lied first. He thought it funny to keep mum about having recorded his claim—to play your father and me all this time. Great joke that. Only it back-fired on him. I'm the only pilot who can find the valley. No one can say that the claim we file on is the same as the one he recorded."

The girl quivered, tensed, and bounded sideways. The belt-ax was lying near the knife. She clutched one in each hand and straightened erect, her eyes ablaze.

"You beast!" she cried. "Go! Go, or I'll kill you!"

He smiled with cool irony. "Why so theatrical? Hysterics are not in your line, my dear Lilith."

That lowered her voice, but not the knife and ax. She began to edge towards him, with the blades raised ready to strike. Her voice came from her stiffened lips, low and hoarse and deathly calm:

"If you do not go, I will kill you, unless you first kill me."

"You are stark crazy. I'm going. It may be two or three weeks before I can come back. That should be long enough for you to starve into sanity. You'll be glad to welcome me then. Only, how about your father? Does it not sober you to realize it will be your fault if he dies?"

For answer, she took a full step nearer. The look in her eyes daunted him. He slanted sideways, caught up Garth's rifle, and ran across to the bank above the canoe. When, more slowly, she came to the top of the bank, he had the canoe launched and was heaving in the wolfskin knapsack.

He jumped aboard with the rifle and one paddle. As he backed offshore, she ran down to the water's edge and flung his engagement ring at his face. It struck his upjerked forearm and glanced outboard and its flash was instantly quenched in the water.

CHAPTER VIII

Woodcraft.

OUT of the pit of blackness, Garth's first dimly conscious thoughts were of water. He was still in swimming. . . . No, the water was only on his face. Not rain, nor poured water—something wet sopping his forehead.

He opened his eyes, blinked the daze from them, and found himself gazing up into a pair of sunken blue eyes. They were clouded and dark with misery. Yet with strange suddenness they brightened. At that he realized they were the eyes of Lilith Ramill.

"What's—happened?" he muttered. Even as his lips moved, he remembered. "Huxby—his pistol. Must have—shot me."

"Yes. Dad also."

Garth sought to tense his flaccid muscles, ready to bound up. She laid a restraining hand on his forehead. "Lie still. He went—"

"Went?"

"Right after it. Be quiet, else you may go unconscious again. The bullet cut across the back of your head. All these two days you've lain there in that frightful stupor. I could not wake you up. I felt sure you'd die."

"Stupor—two days?" he muttered. "Concussion—brain."

He made deliberate trial, and found he could move his legs and arms. "Luck—no paralysis. Soon be all right. But—your father? You said 'father also.' Can't see why. Wolf was rabid only for my claim—not blood mad."

"Of course! The cowardly beast meant only to murder you. But when he fired again, Dad jumped up between."

"Bad?"

"Not if there was a doctor. It's through the shoulder. The coward—to run off with the canoe, instead of shooting himself like a man!"

"Ran off, did he? Thought he had killed your father?"

"No, he said it wasn't serious. All we needed was to take Dad in the canoe and get that man Tobin's medical kit."

"Yet he ran off without you?"

"I made him go. I drove him off, the beastly sneaking coward!"

Garth stared, perplexed. "You did that? Yet he wanted to take your father where he could receive treatment."

She frowned. "He thought you dead. But after I nearly fainted, I pushed against you to get up. I felt you were still alive. I was afraid you'd come to—would move. He would have finished you. So I—drove him off."

"Leaving yourself and your father marooned here."

The girl stiffened. Her mouth went hard. "Don't fancy I did it for you! It was—it was because I was not going to let him finish his sneak murder. It would have been the same if I'd gone off and let you die. You can see that. You must!"

He smiled up at her frown. "All the more sporting of you. Not half bad, I'd say."

"Oh, but it is bad—frightfully bad! No food—not a thing to give Dad all this time. No chance of getting any for either of you. And now his fever, too. No medicine for it!"

A sudden thought jerked Garth up to a sitting position. He swayed from dizziness. Then his head cleared. He was only rather weak from blood-loss and sore about the back of his head. An exploring hand found a wad of moss, tied upon his wound with a band of plaited grass. He heard the girl murmur:

"I fixed Dad's the same way—ashes and the moss to hold it on. Ashes or soot—I once heard about something like that for cuts."

He pointed to the scattered ashes of the dead fires. "Be quick. Build a big blaze and throw on green wood. That southbound plane! Must signal it. Even if he's aboard, he can't keep the pilot from coming down."

Lilith Ramill's head drooped despondently. "I saw it this morning—way out across the sky. First there was the drone of the motor. Then I saw it—way off. Only, I could do nothing. Yesterday I used your last match. I wanted to boil for Dad the one pinch of tea that's left. A puff of wind blew out the flame. Now there's no hope. He took your rifle too. No fire or food or gun, or any chance of rescue!"

Garth looked around and saw her father tossing in feverish sleep under the shade of a slight brush canopy. He gave the overwrought girl a bantering smile.

"What, merely a matter of fire, medicine, food, and escape? If only you were a Boy Scout! How about becoming a Campfire Girl? Fetch me a two-foot willow branch the size of your forefinger, a thong, one straight dry stick, and that chunk of dead birch trunk."

A little sand increased the friction of the fire-drill point at the bottom of the shallow hole he made in the block of wood. The dry birch soon began to smoke. Lilith had gathered tinder of dead inner bark. In wide-eyed wonderment, she watched the simple primitive method of firemaking.

"Now, we're under way," he said. "Next comes medicine. By using the ashes, you gave our wounds sterile dressings. Your father was tuned up to the pink of condition. His wound will heal as rapidly as mine. What little fever he has means nothing. To cool it, crush in his drinking water some of the cranberries from over there along the edge of the muskeg. You might boil willow bark and add a little of the bitter decoction to the cranberry juice."

"Oh, it's good to know he's not sick. But to starve to death!"

Erskine F-L Convention

congress to pass adequate federal old age pension legislation It advocated that state departments patronize cooperatives wherever possible.

The convention opposed passage of the Guffey-Dockweiler bill providing for the repeal of the existing federal taxes on cocoanut oil; passed a resolution of appreciation and confidence for Congressman Buckler, and a resolution of thanks to the people of Erskine for the use of the high school auditorium.

Congress was urged to pass the Frazier-Lemke farm finance bill; organization of producer-consumer cooperatives was urged and increased activity throughout the district to insure successful elections was asked.

Rap Pension Measure

The resolution opposing the present old-age pension system said: "We express our dissatisfaction with the old age pension law as passed by the reactionary controlled Minnesota legislature at the special session as not being based upon humanitarian principles and inadequate to care for the indigent aged in a respectable manner."

Opposition to the principle of the sales tax was expressed and recommendations made for increased taxes on incomes in the higher brackets and increases in the gift and inheritance tax.

Repeal of the present "without party designation" law for election of state legislators was urged and it was agreed that candidates for the state legislature endorsed by the Farmer-Labor party be pledged to work and vote for the repeal of this measure.

Members of state committees elected at the convention include: Eric Friberg of Roseau county and H. O. Berve of Pennington, platform; J. O. Melby of Red Lake and Nels Engen of Marshall, nominating; W. E. Day of Clearwater and J. W. Nelson of Mahnomen, constitution and law; H. H. Brief Spring Weather Cut Short by Blizzard

A brief taste of spring weather enjoyed over the weekend in this section was cut short by a howling blizzard which bore down upon the territory Tuesday morning again blocking the roads with deep drifts.

The roads were blocked generally thruout North Dakota and Minnesota as far south as Detroit Lakes. State highway department crews are busy all over the territory digging out and by Wednesday main highways are again open to traffic. Four to five inches of snow fell during Tuesday and early Wednesday.

Leonard Eriksson May Seek Congressional Post

Leonard Eriksson, representative in the legislature from Otter Tail county spent Wednesday in the city on matters of business. Mr. Eriksson contemplates filing for the republican nomination for congressman from the Ninth district.

"I am trying to find out if there is a demand for a new representative in congress from this district," Mr. Eriksson stated to a Forum representative. "Many friends at home and elsewhere in the district suggest that I announce myself a candidate for congress on the republican ticket. I know Mr Buckler, the present congressman well and respect him. I also know that whoever is selected to oppose him will have a hard fight. The republicans, therefore, are faced with this paramount problem—who among the available and qualified receptive candidates has the best chance of winning in November?"

SLEEPS WHILE CHAIR IN WHICH HE SITS BURNS

Isle—The world's soundest sleeper was discovered in the Mille Lacs district recently. An unnamed resident sat down to sleep in a comfortable rocker in an Isle living room. Between his lips dropped a lighted cigarette. As he lapsed into the arms of Morpheus the cigarette slid out of his mouth and fell into the upholstery of the chair. The upholstery caught afire and the blaze spread to the drapes on the nearby window. But our hero slept on, undisturbed by the conflagration around him. He was still asleep when another occupant of the building, awakened by the smoke, dragged him out of the chair. A large hole was burned in the back of the sleepy one's shirt. The damage to the chair and other furnishing was nominal. A subscription list is being drawn up to buy him a new shirt, some salve to heal the burns, and a medal to identify him as the world's champion sleeper.

congress to pass adequate federal old age pension legislation. It advocated that state departments patronize cooperatives wherever possible.

The convention opposed passage of the Guffey-Dockweiler bill providing for the repeal of the existing federal taxes on cocoanut oil; passed a resolution of appreciation and confidence for Congressman Buckler, and a resolution of thanks to the people of Erskine for the use of the high school auditorium.

Congress was urged to pass the Frazier-Lemke farm finance bill; organization of producer-consumer cooperatives was urged and increased activity throughout the district to insure successful elections was asked.

Rap Pension Measure

The resolution opposing the present old-age pension system said: "We express our dissatisfaction with the old age pension law as passed by the reactionary controlled Minnesota legislature at the special session as not being based upon humanitarian principles and inadequate to care for the indigent aged in a respectable manner."

Opposition to the principle of the sales tax was expressed and recommendations made for increased taxes on incomes in the higher brackets and increases in the gift and inheritance tax.

Repeal of the present "without party designation" law for election of state legislators was urged and it was agreed that candidates for the state legislature endorsed by the Farmer-Labor party be pledged to work and vote for the repeal of this measure.

—o—

Leonard Eriksson, representative in the legislature from Otter Tail county spent Wednesday in the city on matters of business. Mr. Eriksson [illegible] for the republican nomination for congressman from the Ninth district.

"I am trying to find out if there is a demand for a new representative in congress from this district," Mr. Eriksson stated to a Forum representative. "Many friends at home and elsewhere in the district suggest that I announce myself a candidate for congress on the republican ticket. I know Mr. Buckler, the present congressman well and respect him. I also know that whoever is selected to oppose him will have a hard fight. The republicans, therefore, are faced with this paramount problem—who among the available and qualified receptive candidates has the best chance of winning in November?"

SLEEPS WHILE CHAIR IN WHICH HE SITS BURNS

Isle—The world's soundest sleeper was discovered in the Mille Lacs district recently. An unnamed resident sat down to sleep in a comfortable rocker in an Isle living room. Between his lips dropped a lighted cigarette. As he lapsed into the arms of Morpheus the cigarette slid out of his mouth and fell into the upholstery of the chair. The upholstery caught afire and the blaze spread to the drapes on the nearby window. But our hero slept on, undisturbed by the conflagration around him. He was still asleep when another occupant of the building, awakened by the smoke, dragged him out of the chair. A large hole was burned in the back of the sleepy one's shirt. The damage to the chair and other furnishing was nominal. A subscription list is being drawn up to buy him a new shirt, some salve to heal the burns, and a medal to identify him as the world's champion sleeper.

ORFIELD GIVES ABSORBING TALK ON NORSE LORE

Brage Male Chorus Renders Several Numbers at Lecture Program

Assistant attorney general M. N. Orfield delivered the fourth and last, of the Winter Lecture course sponsored by the Sons and Daughters of Norway at the Norse hall on Monday evening. Appearing in concert numbers on the program with Mr. Orfield was the Brage male chorus of this city under the direction of Dr. P. L. Vistaunet. A luncheon and social hour followed the program.

Speaking on the subject: "Norse Contributions to World History", Mr. Orfield sketched a brief history of the Norsemen and their colonization in Iceland, Greenland, France, and the British Isles and the discovery and attempts at colonization of Vinland (America), by Leif Erikson. He discussed the two Golden Ages of Norse literature; the first as developed at the time of Wergeland and Welhaven and the second, in the last part of the last century with the writings of Ibsen, Bjornson Jonas Lie, Arne Garborg, Alexander Kjelland, Sigrid Unseth, and others.

Mr. Orfield is an interesting speaker, discussing his topic with an easy grace and a fluent language which denotes a thorough knowledge of his subject. His audience followed him with an attention bordering on absorbtion. He used a map of Europe in his talk pointing out the geographical locations of the Norse conquests.

The Brage chorus sang several selections which were all exceptionally well rendered and enthusiastically received. They closed with "Sangen Har Lysning", baritone solo rendered by Ted Skoglund.

Mrs. Henry Hjelle left for her home at Goodridge, Monday, having spent the past two weeks in this city as a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Kjos.

Hi-Jackers Grab Red Lake Liquor

Red Lake and Polk county officers were investigating the theft of a $3000 load of liquor destined for the Red Lake Falls liquor store on Monday night.

The load was stolen near Mentor, according to the reports, the truck being on its way to Red Lake Falls when it was held up by hijackers who transferred the load of liquor to their own truck and drove off towards North Dakota. It was reported to have gotten stalled near Mallory and was pulled back into the road by a wrecker called out from Grand Forks between 1 and 2 a. m. Tuesday. The robbery was said to have taken place about 11 p. m. Monday night.

The Red Lake and Polk county officers were at East Grand Forks investigating the matter on Tuesday afternoon, but would not reveal whether or not they had found trace of the hi-jackers.

Seven hundred and fifty weary, but satisfied farmer-labor delegates started the homeward trek from St. Paul at five o'clock Sunday morning following adjournment of a state convention which had elected Paul A. Harris of this city, state president of the association, I. C. Strout executive secretary, adopted a platform declaring for a new economic order, endorsed a full slate of candidates for state offices and listened to innumerable speeches. The officers elected this time, however, will hold office until the convention of 1939 Another change provides for raising the membership fee to one dollar and fifty cents per year for the head of the family, this including a year's subscription to the Minnesota Leader. W.P.A. and N.R.S. to Cooperate to Prevent Farm Labor Shortage

WPA will work in close cooperation with National Reemployment Service offices to prevent any shortage of labor for spring farm work, Victor Christgau, state WPA administrator, said today.

Work will be curtailed to the extent necessary to fill all requests for labor filed with the employment offices by farmers and other private employers, Mr. Christgau said.

He pointed out that the NRS offices in all parts of the state and the Minnesota Employment Services in the Twin Cities and Duluth have an accurate up-to-date check on the supply and demand of labor which serves as a barometer for the operations of WPA and other federal work agencies.

"This is in line with our instructions from Washington," Mr. Christgau explained, "which call for a reduction of approximately 18,000 in our employment quota between now and June 30."

In establishing the lower employment figures for each district, he said, consideration is being given such factors as seasonal employment and work opportunities created through activities of other federal agencies scheduled to begin operations in the state as soon as weather conditions permit.

Letter From Joseph Wolf

The following letter was given to the press by Joseph Wolf, democratic committeeman from Minnesota on his return from Washington:

To the Editor:

On my return from Washington, D. C. I find many newspaper clippings that appeared in different newspapers in the State. It would be unwise for me to attempt to answer each and every article that has appeared. I have such great respect for Mr. Farley and his ability to conduct the affairs of the Party that I cannot abuse his confidence by giving to the press statements which Mr. Farley gave to me in private. Therefore, I shall have to refrain from quoting anything Mr. Farley may have said However, I may state that our two hours meeting at his apartment was very cordial and very satisfactory.

It is necessary for me to deny that I was invited to go to Washington by the Powers-that-be. I planned this trip of my own accord. At no time has any person connected with the Administration asked me to resign my position as Democratic National Committeeman. I expect to serve out my time. It will be the duty of the delegates who attend the Philadelphia Convention to name the next National Committeeman. I have no right as an individual at this time to attempt to name anyone for the National Committeemanship. This is the duty of the delegates and then it has to be ratified by the National Committee.

A great deal has been said lately in regard to what might take place at the Philadelphia Convention. It has been rumored that the contest has already been settled. For the benefit of those who are interested, permit me to explain that a contest from any state is not settled until it has gone through the procedure required by the rules and regulations of the National Party: namely, first, the contest must go to the National Committee; second, from there it goes to the Credentials Committee, and then carried to the floor of the main convention. This is the usual procedure and no person has the power to settle a contest in advance.

In discussion with many of the Administrative leaders in Washington, I found that they all realized that President Roosevelt must receive the progressive and liberal vote, regardless of Party affiliation in Minnesota, as well as in other states. This was answered by the President himself some time ago when he suggested that the Democrats should endorse Senator Norris, a progressive Republican. This also answers all questions regarding each state in that it is necessary for them to invite the progressive and liberal element to support the President of the United States

In a few days I expect to confer with Judge John F. D. Meighen, Chairman, in regard to further arrangements for the convention (to be held April the 21st) and at that time I will have another statement to make which will be of interest to the Roosevelt followers. From reports coming in from all parts of the State there is every indication that this convention will be one of the largest and best attended convention that the Democratic Party has ever had in this State.

JOSEPH WOLF,
Democratic Nat'l. Committeeman

Conservation Dept. Wants Fees for Parks

The Minnesota Conservation Commission at its regular meeting last week passed a resolution authorizing small fees to be charged for the use of state parks.

The Commission is authorized to charge fees by a law passed in 1933. The action was taken because members of the Commission felt that tax funds should not be expended for maintaining such "special privileges."

A charge of 25 cents per day for parking on Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays from May 17 to October 4 will be made in the following state parks: Itasca, Scenic Jay Cooke, Sibley, Alexander, Ramsey, Interstate, Gooseberry Falls, Camden, Whitewater, Fort Ridgely.

further charge of 25 cents per day for camping privileges and for the use of privately-owned boats used on lakes within state parks may also be made, but no person will be charged more than a total of 25 cents per day.

Overnight cabins will be rented by the state at Itasca and Scenic parks for not to exceed two days continuous stay at a minimum charge of $2 50 per day for one or two persons, $3.50 for three persons, and $4 per day for four or more persons. Cabins at Interstate park will be rented at $2 per day.

All fees collected will be used for the maintenance and operation of state parks. The Commission adopted a comprehensive game management policy submitted by Gustav Swanson biologist of the division of game and fish.

The game policy was ordered printed in pamphlet form, for general distribution among interested individuals and organizations.

The Commission received the resignation of Mr. Swanson, effective April 15. He has accepted a faculty post at the University of Maine.

Conditions Much Worse Than Old Saloon Days

Fred J. Freestone, Master of New York State, Points Out Evils of Repeal in His Annual Address

"Never, in all America's history, have we been so sharply faced with great moral issues as at the present time, and if ever the Grange is to make its influence felt for the defense of right, and in fighting the wrong—that time is now.

"The repeal of National Prohibition has plunged us into a state of chaos, lawlessness and disaster that was fully expected by all who remembered the liquor regime which preceded the enactment of National Prohibition. The same defiant outlaw which the liquor traffic has always been, again has the nation by the throat, in form infinitely more degrading than even in the old saloon days. Restrictions that formerly held the traffic in some semblance of control have been thrown to the winds and we are compelled to look upon conditions that bring the tinge of shame to the cheek of every self-respecting American.

"In the midst of such a deplorable situation we should remember that while the nation has repealed Prohibition, the Grange has not done so—but stands four-square against the legalized liquor traffic and will fight to the last ditch this greatest of all destroyers By example, as well as by precept, the Grange membership declares its continued belief in temperance; and that it will never once relax its fight until every vestige of the degrading liquor traffic has been driven from the land, and by a vigorous program of sane, persistent education seek to stem the awful tide of destruction which repeal has let loose upon our land. Perhaps the passing of local option laws in town and county may be the way out.

Alongside our program in behalf of an improved agriculture and a richer rural life, we must remember that high moral standards lie at the foundation of an enduring national life, and that to ignore these cannot fail to lead to disaster.

"Apparently America has forgotten—but the Grange must help her to remember."

Veterans Will Buy Farms Says Official

Soldiers' bonus money is going to be used to help buy a good many farm homes for World War veterans, the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul believes.

This conviction is based on applications for farms coming from its fieldmen in the 4 states where it operates, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North Dakota, and was emphasized by discussions with fieldmen at the recent conference in St. Paul, according to President Roy A. Nelson. Mr. Nelson said:

"Constructive, conservative use is going to be made of bonus funds by many former service men in the Northwest. It seems quite probable that more good will come of these payments than of payments made a number of years ago. The veterans are older and hence naturally somewhat more conservative and there has been the added experience of the past few years which shows the relative security of a farm home compared with a home in an industrial city."

Citing the preliminary figures of the 1935 farm census, Mr. Nelson said:

"It appears that within the 5 year period of 1930 to 1935 there has been an increase of almost 44,000 in the number of farm units in these 4 states. Farms under the census include tracts as small as 3 acres, but the significance of the figures lies in the fact that so many people have recognized the substantial character of farms and are returning to that way of living"

He said that many who are only renting farms are desirous of buying and among them is a considerable number of ex-service men who are planning to use their bonus money to help make a down payment, or to give additional capital for farm equipment and improvements.

Adam Smith— "All labor expended in producing strong drink is utterly unproductive. It adds nothing to the wealth of the community."

New AAA Chance For Balanced Prod.

The new farm bill, replacing the AAA, unquestionably affords an opportunity to hold the progress made in keeping farm production in balance with marketing demands and in sustaining farm prices, says J S. Jones secretary-treasurer of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.

"While not as spectacular and possibly lacking the immediate appeal to farmers, as the AAA program," Mr. Jones declared, "I firmly believe that the new legislation, if practically administered and given the whole-hearted support of farmers will not only conserve soil fertility, our greatest natural resource, but also will prevent the accumulation of burdensome crop surplusses.

"Soil conservation is of unquestioned material interest not only to the present and future generations of farmers but to all our people. The future welfare and prosperity of the country is inseparably linked with the fertility of our soil," Mr. Jones declared.

The greatest handicap to the success of the new program this year is the slowness with which Washington is proceeding in appropriating the necessary funds to get the work under way. It appeared on March 17 that funds finally had been allotted, and as soon as the financial setup is complete the program will get under way. In Minnesota the College of Agriculture, working through County Farm Bureaus and other groups, will take the lead in administering the program.

Money for War Should Go to Youth Says E. Benson

New York.—(YNS)—Scoring opponents to the American Youth Act which he and Congressman Amlie introduced into the Senate and the House, Senator Benson, soft-spoken westerner told reporters, "Hell they say there's no money when any bill comes up that they don't like. They're appropriating a billion dollars for war, aren't they? Take the money from the Army and give it to the youth!"

The Farmer-Labor Senator, Representative from Minnesota, spoke at a meeting for the support of his act. A thousand young people applauded. Both Senator Benson and Congressman Amlie were given a great ovation.

A telegram from Governor Floyd Olson of Minnesota to the meeting stated: "the Youth Bill is a step in the right direction. The fact that youth has been completely deserted and has no place in our present economic system is evidence of decay and disintegration of the system itself. Fundamental changes rather than reform is needed, in this youth must lead the way and help create a better order. It is only through organizations such as the American Youth Congress that youth will receive recognition and its just demands yet."

Telegrams of greeting and support were received from David Lasser, National Chairman of the Workers Alliance of America with 500,000 members, Congressman Marcantonio who pledged his continued support of the bill; Charles J. Hendley, President of the teacher's union; Edwin C. Mitchell, Vice Chairman of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union and Ernest Lundeen, member of Congress who called for a national labor party in 1936.

The American Youth Act would provide for "vocational training and employment for youth between the ages of sixteen and twentyfive; full educational opportunities for high school, college and post graduate students", and wages will be equal to the prevailing trade union wage rate, in no case less than $15 per week. Wages on college projects would in no case be less than $25 a month, in addition to fees and school expenses.

FARMERS UNION LETTER

Members of the committee arrived in Washington the middle of the week and found that political Washington is at this time most concerned about what Congress may do with the new Revenue Bill which will seek additional funds to balance out the large appropriation to cover the settlement of the Soldiers Bonus and the new Farm Soil Conservation Program. The next important matter, and with almost equal political significance, is the President's request for a billion and a half additional relief money. So far as the Revenue Bill is concerned, the great question affecting farmers and other consumers is the commodity tax, or the consumption tax, which in effect amounts to a sales tax that may be imposed upon agricultural commodities. Politically, the Administration fears to impose the commodity or consumption tax. The excuse is that it is needed to finance the new Farm Bill. The Farmers Union Legislative Committee will oppose consumption taxes. If, however, the House Ways and Means Committee includes in its program, which will be announced within the next week, that agricultural commodities are to be taxed, it will afford our Committee the opportunity to appear and insist upon excise taxes being imposed on all imported fats and oils which compete in our home market. We will insist upon rates of excise taxes that will afford some protection to our domestic market

The outline of a proposed program for the new Farm Bill is just announced. We are, of course very happy that our two and a half years of persistent work to bring benefits to the flax seed producers has borne fruit to the extent that the Department of Agriculture now announces a special program for flax seed production. It is estimated that it will bring something more than three million dollars of benefit payments to the spring wheat area.

Resettlement Funds in Danger

What we are more interested in at this time than any other subject is what is to be done in the way of providing help for several hundred thousand impoverished farm families, who at the moment are wholly dependent upon the resources and the friendly attitude of the Resettlement Administration. There is but one department in this Administration which spends all of its time and energy seeking to help destitute and unfortunate farm families in America, and that is the Resettlement Administration. It is the one Department in Washington that is subject to the most bitter attack from such organizations as the Liberty League, Manufacturers Association, U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the rest of that coterie. First of all, these unfortunate rural districts should know that the unallocated funds of the Resettlement Administration have been called for to be put back in the general fund of the Treasury. The next thing you should know is that in the President's request for a billion and a half of new relief money, it has all been requested to be turned over to the WPA, which is strictly an urban organization. It was not set up to meet the problem of the unfortunate farm families. Our job and the job of the farm families back over the country is to immediately wage war on Congress to see that the Resettlement Administration is provided with adequate funds to meet the bare needs of the unfortunate farm families in this country. That you may know how serious the situation is, there are approximately 22,000 farm families in North Dakota and 25,000 farm families in South Dakota, not to mention other states, with similar problems now dependent upon the Resettlement Administration. These families must be cared for until normal crop conditions and fair prices return.

We have pretty well canvassed important Members of Congress on this matter of rural relief and we warn you that if we are to retain the Resettlement Administration with funds to do the job, it will be because the farmers and the towns people of the affected areas at once write strong letters to their Senators and Representatives insisting that the Resettlement Administration be provided with ample funds to take care of this problem.

SIDELITES ON THE STATE FARMER-LABOR CONVENTION

Governor Olson spoke almost two and a half hours delivering his keynote speech. The fact that he finished apparently as fresh and strong as when he started would appear to discredit the rumor so pleasantly circulated by the reactionary press that he has one foot in the grave.

* * * * *

The much-heralded split that was to occur when the Benson and Petersen forces locked horns over the gubernatorial endorsement failed to materialize. When a resolution providing for dual endorsements was voted down, Hjalmer Petersen yielded and withdrew his name. Unanimous endorsement of Elmer A. Benson for governor followed. Hjalmer Petersen was later endorsed for railroad and warehouse commissioner.

* * * * *

The office of lieutenant governor will hold no terrors for G. T. Linsten. He has spent his time at the capitol during every session of the legislature for a great many years as legislative representative for the order of railway trainmen. He has a thorough knowledge of parliamentary law and procedure, is a capable speaker and will be an excellent presiding officer.

* * * * *

The daily press is blatantly proclaiming that the convention "toned down" the radical 1934 platform. Placing the two platforms side by side will show that the 1936 platform says the same things as the 1934 platform did, but leaves less opportunity for the reactionaries to misconstrue and garble its meaning. However, give the boys time, they will probably find plenty of boogeys in it.

* * * * *

The weather man was very obliging. He turned loose a good old howling blizzard for the delegates from the northern part of the state to drive thru getting to the convention. It helped make us all feel very much at home.

* * * * *

Paul Harris was elected state president of the farmer-labor association and the news photographers pounced down on him. When one of them said "This is for the Minneapolis Journal", Paul was so flabbergasted that the carricature the journal run on the front page was the result.

* * * * *

Too much time is being lost in conventions waiting for the committees to get through with their work and make their reports. The report of the legislative committee was lost in the shuffle during the closing hour of the convention at about 5:00 a. m. Sunday. Such things could be avoided if the standing committees were selected by the various district conventions earlier and started their deliberations the day before the state convention opens. Their reports could then be ready on the opening day of the convention and much wasted time utilized to better advantage.

* * * * *

There was no shortage of presiding officers. Charles Munn was elected convention chairman and Senator Lommen vice chairman. With the assistance of Dewey Johnson and Senator Bridgeman they did yeoman service in attempting to keep order among 650 delegates and a still larger number of spectators who insisted on crowding on the floor. The acoustics in the convention hall were deplorable, the undertone talking among delegates and visitors reverberated while the speakers were difficult to hear, even with the aid of the amplifyers.

* * * * *

The convention took the first step towards the formation of a national farmer-labor party by passing a resolution for a committee to explore the possibilities and call meetings or conventions where liberals from all sections can be sounded out on the proposition. The passage of the resolution became an answer to Joe Wolf who invited the farmer-labor forces to co-operate with the democrats on the national field.

Liberal democrats may as well recognize the fact right now that there is no possibility of reforming a party dominated by the southern share-cropper exploiters and corrupt Chicago and New York political machines. If they mean what they say, when they talk about a "planned economy", and "a fuller life for the masses" they had better join the farmer-labor association rather than to invite the farmer-laborites to join with them.

Regardless of the sincerity of purpose and honesty of president Roosevelt and his supporters, their efforts will continue to be limited to boondoggling if he is to be responsible to a party machine controlled by exploiters and racketeers. We are sure that we speak for the farmer-laborites when we invite the progressive democrats to join with us in forming a new national party, coming before the people with a platform of production for use.

* * * * *

The Ramsey county delegation was unusually conservative at this convention. A desire to win in the St. Paul city election seems to have done strange things to them.

SHALL WE HANG SEPARATELY?

(From Iowa Unionist and Public Forum)

We have just opened our morning mail. When one contemplates the pleas from distressed unemployed, depressed farm groups, labor pickets beaten up and jailed, aged people seeking pensions, struggling organizations trying to defend the American rights of civil liberty, women's and men's and church leagues against fascism and war—dozens of them, each pleading for a decent and just economic and social order—the spirit within us cries: "If all these would only get together!"

Ever since we became chaplain of the Central Labor Union of Kansas City, more than 30 years ago, these pleas have been hammering at our door. When we became mayor of Sioux City, 18 years ago, they came thicker. Since we started this paper, nine years ago, we have been up against these problems every minute. The question presses home upon us every hour: Why don't all these people get together?

Each of these tens of thousands of individuals and groups wants assistance. Each of them deserves help. But, to aid each by itself is physically impossible. There are enough of them to take control of our institutions and collectively solve the problem of all. Why don't they get together?

A SENSIBLE RULING

(Minnesota Union Advocate, St. Paul)

If American industrialists had any visions of hammering down American standard of living by offering employees wages lower than those provided under the WPA set-up, they were given a set-back last week that should bring them to their senses.

In many municipalities if a relief client refuses to accept private employment he is immediately taken off the relief rolls.

Certain employers expected to use their leverage to force humble men and women to accept wage scales even lower than the $19 a month "security wage" approved by President Roosevelt.

Last week Harry L. Hopkins, administrator of the WPA, issued an order which declared specifically that no WPA worker need accept employment in private industry at a wage lower than a standard or going rate of wages; that such work shall not be in conflict with established Labor relationships; that the work, whether it be permanent or temporary, shall be a full-time job.

Naturally the wage chiselers are going to set up a howl, and the public may expect a lot of propaganda during the next few weeks relative to jobless people refusing to accept employment in private industry. But it should be remembered that relief workers do not have to accept work at wages less than the standard wage. It should also be remembered that this is America and not China.

A lot of employers appear to confuse the two nations when they are establishing their wage scales.

DEPRESSION IS OVER—FOR WHOM

(Minnesota Union Advocate)

These are great days for the optimists who have a few million dollars salted away for a rainy day. To them the depression is over. As a matter of fact, they never knew there was a depression on.

The latest of these is Louis K. Liggett, head of the Liggett chain of stores operated by the United Drug company. He says the depression is over and that prosperity instead of being just around the corner is right here.

From most reliable sources the American Federation of Labor has calculated that there are 12,656,000 able bodied men and women unemployed. There are 3,500,000 others who would be on the relief rolls if they did not have jobs on WPA projects which pay from $19 to $94 per month.

As for the employed workers—all of them are working for less today than a year ago as a result of the Supreme Court decision on the NRA. And late in 1935 the leading industrialists reduced wage rates one per cent per hour and increased the length of the average work week three hours, which made it possible to throw another million workers out of employment.

Undisputed figures reveal that in the last half of 1935 the profits of one hundred and twenty large corporations increased 141 per cent over 1934, and a recent analysis shows that stocks listed on the New York stock exchange have increased in value thirty-one billion dollars during the past three years. But shareholders in these corporations do not earn their living by the sweat of their brows.

Liggett's statement might evoke loud cheers from a convention of stockholders, but to the 12,656,000 jobless men and women in the United States—the depression is still on.

"BANKNIGHT" IS A LOTTERY

(Freeborn Patriot)

Legal definition of a lottery, quoted from Mason's Minnesota Statutes of 1933, with provisions for punishment of offenders, follows:

"A lottery is a scheme for the distribution of property by chance, among persons who have paid or agreed to pay a valuable consideration for the chance, whether it shall be called a lottery, raffle, gift enterprise, or by any other name, and is hereby declared unlawful and a public nuisance.

"Every person who shall contrive, propose, or draw a lottery, or shall assist in contriving, proposing, or drawing a lottery, shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by both."

In a footnote referring to a Minnesota supreme court decision, Mason states: "A plan whereby the merchants of a city gave tickets to their customers upon the purchase of merchandise and afterwards a drawing was had on chance for cash or other prizes was a lottery."

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

(The Challenge)

A remarkable story of international cooperation was carried in the press the other day. It seems that the South African embassy in Washington had some construction work to be done, and followed the lovely tradition of offering it to the lowest bidder without regard for the wages or working conditions of the men who would have to do the actual work.

The Building Trades Council of the capital demanded that all bids from non-union contractors be rejected, without result. The Council then appealed to the American Federation of Labor, which communicated with the South African Federation of Labor, which brought pressure on the government of the Union of South Africa, which instructed its Washington Embassy to accede to the demands of the Washington Building Trades' Council!

And who says nothing can be accomplished in a roundabout way?

Editor, Tri-County Forum:

Your editorial of March 19—namely "We are Suspicious of Greeks Bearing Gifts" was a disappointment to myself and many other readers of the Forum as shown by their desire that I refute or clear up what appears to be an erroneous view on your part. I hope to do this without incurring farther disunity.

The Communist Party realizes that the majority of the employed and unemployed workers, farmers, and city middle class people whom the Farmer-Labor party must reach are not ready for the replacement of capitalism by a workers' and farmers' government. They are, however, anxious to join in a fight against encroachments on living standards in defense of democratic rights, and against the fascist aggression and war, but are not yet convinced of the necessity of making a clean sweep of the system and establishing the Socialist society.

The disillusioned masses are willing to support Farmer-Labor candidates with the following issues as their program: Higher wages; the 30 hour week without reduction in pay; the right to organize and bargain collectively; outlawing of company unions; the opening of all closed factories by the government to supply jobs to the unemployed at union wages; adequate relief; genuine unemployment insurance; a program of public works of lasting social benefit to the masses; against sales tax, higher utility rates and high monopoly prices; relief to needy farmers; against evictions and foreclosures; government loans without interest to poor farmers; land for sharecroppers and small tenant farmers; unrestricted civil and workers' rights; full civil rights for negroes; abolition of the power of the supreme court to invalidate social legislation; against reaction, fascism and war.

There are two opposing, clashing forces today in the world. On the one hand is the force of peace and a life of abundance and advances represented by the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. On the other is the force of war, of hunger and of medieval darkness ruining and debasing the economic and cultural heritage of mankind, as represented by Hitler, by German Fascism. No progressive person can be indifferent as to the outcome of the struggle between the greatest peace force in the world today as embodied in the peace policy of the Soviet Union and the force of bestiality and war as represented by Hitler.

Those two British veterans of Fabian Socialism, Beatrice and Sidney Webb, used to write a lot of misleading stories about the Soviet Union. They read all those bed-time fables about "suppression of freedom" and "Stalin dictatorship" that still worry some of our good friends in this country. If anyone wanted to take a crack at the land of the Soviets, all he had to do was quote a juicy paragraph from the writings of the Webbs.

Then—the Webbs figured they had better do some first-hand investigating. They traveled through the Soviet Union and poked around on their own. Now they are making up for some of the damage they did in earlier days. They have written a book called "Soviet Democracy" which proves that the Soviet Union is the only land where true democracy prevails And Sidney Webb, along with George Bernard Shaw, was one of the main speakers at the huge British Congress of Peace and Friendship with the Soviet Union. "No other state is so concerned with satisfying the needs of the masses as is the Soviet Union—not only their elementary need but their more complex cultural needs as well," Webb told the Congress.

What is the difference between Hitler and Stalin? Hitler is the DICTATOR for the big bankers and industrialists of Germany. He safeguards the interests of the monied class against the oppressed and discontented masses of that country. Stalin is the SPOKESMAN for the workers and peasants party of all Russia. He safeguards the proletariats' interest against the encroachments of the capitalistic and imperialistic nations and all other enemies of the First WORKERS REPUBLICS in the world.

The forces of reaction and fascism do not wait, and the masses cannot afford to wait. They need the Farmer-Labor Party now. And nothing could so quickly and effectively assist the distressed masses as the developing of the Farmer-Labor Party in every locality and state, as well as nationally.

Your for Unity,
HENRY S. VAN PELT

Dear Mr Aalbu:

In reading the last issue of your paper, I find an editorial that is pretty hard to digest. It concerns the united front which the Communist leaders advise to take during our next election—to throw their forces in with the farmer-labor and all other progressive elements and build a Third political party for the next election. I think you under-estimate the power of the Communists when you say they are only a few and their help would not cut much figure for or against. I will tell you Mr. Aalbu that the farmer labor party of Minnesota does not amount to much when compared with the Communist forces of our nation, and all over the world. If it had not been for their influence, we would have had imperialist war right now. But the capitalists know when they rig out a soldier with guns, etc., they don't know what direction he will shoot. Thank God we have advanced that far. The Communists show the way. Most of the Communists in Minnesota have been members of either Socialist or farmer-labor party but they grew discouraged. That is those who understand the fuss that we are in at the present time. The farmer-labor party of Minnesota is loaded down with the biggest bunch of small leaders that was ever on the wrecking crew of any political party. The situation is not good. If you fail to see into those things I will excuse you for the stand you take, but it will not do much credit to the farmer-labor party to split up the forces.

Respectfully,
PEDER FURUSETH

INDUSTRIAL CITIES FIND LIQUOR AVAILABILITY HARM TO MEN AND SHOPS

Excessive availability of beer and hard liquor working to the detriment of the factories and the workmen themselves, is given by the press as the reason why Michigan plans to reduce in great numbers the liquor dispensaries in that state.

"Members of the state liquor control commission disclosed today that they plan to reduce by hundreds the number of licensed beer and liquor venders when present licenses expire on May 1," stated a special dispatch from Lansing on February 27.

"Complaints have come in volume," continues the article in the Chicago Tribune, "from employers of labor in several of the leading industrial cities regarding the large number of licensees near their plants. John S. McDonald, commission chairman, said that relatively few permits will be renewed in these sections."

It was Mr. McDonald who was quoted as saying: "It is apparent that in numerous instances the excessive availability of beer and hard liquor is working to the detriment not only of the factories but of the workmen themselves."

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

Many a time a man has been discharged in business, not because his actual task was poorly done, but because the spirit in which he did it "pulled down" the morale of his fellow workers. That worker was a little poison spot spreading the infection of discontent or discouragment or disloyalty Upon the other hand, men and women, who, perhaps, did not do such brilliant work, have been valued by their employers because of the spirit in which they worked—because of their loyalty to the firm and their pride in its achievements.

"To be alive in such an age!

To live to it!
To give to it!
Fling forth thy sorrow to the wind
And link thy hope with human kind.

"Give thanks with all thy flaming heart,
Crave but to have in it a part,
Give thanks and clasp thy heritage—
To be alive in such an age."

UNEMPLOYMENT

When the Supreme Court took the Blue Eagle of the NRA by the hind legs, laid its neck carefully across the chopping block and neatly lopped off its head, there was loud jubilation among industrialists. . .

For the day of government interference and regimentation had apparently, come to an end. "Rugged Individualism" had come back into its own!

Its shackles removed, American industry would now set out in earnest on the road back to recovery. Factory chimneys would belch smoke, wheels would turn, workers would be provided with jobs. And, last but not least, corporate profits would mount.

* * *

And, in a measure, Industry's confident prophecies were fulfilled—at least insofar as profits were concerned. For the curve of corporate earnings took a sharp upward turn, and has been climbing ever since.

Enemies of Government regulation, and critics of the Administration, pointed to this as convincing proof of the grave danger from which the land had been saved by the timely action of the Supreme Court. Had matters been permitted to continue under the NRA, the whole country would have gone to pot!

Evidence of Industry's improved state was promptly reflected in rising prices on the stock exchanges U. S. Steel, for example was down to $35 per share. It is now $64. General Motors had about the same rise. Case Threshing Machine was around $60. It is now $136.

These are merely samples of what happened, on the average, to the 1,200 corporations listed on the leading exchanges.

* * *

But in one small particular, Industry's glowing predictions were not fulfilled. Employment, surprisedly, went down rather than up!

There seemed to be a large, fly swimming about in the soup, somewhere! How had it gotten there?

The industrial gentlemen had glib explanations to offer. . . For this or that reason, the phenomenon was entirely natural. The disparity between production and employment would correct itself in time. That, they could confidently promise. For, with the death of the NRA, were they not, themselves the law and the prophets!

* * *

There were two agencies however, which were unable to take this philosophical attitude—the American Federation of Labor and the U S. Government. They set out to discover how this puzzling state of affairs came about.

It wasn't too hard to find. Quickly enough it developed that when hour and wage codes were destroyed by the Court's decision, a large proportion of Industry took immediate advantage of the removal of these restraints. Some merely lengthened hours. Others reduced wages, but permitted hours to stand. Still others cut wages at the same time that they increased hours.

The investigation showed that about half of Industry had retained substantially the hours and wages of the NRA. The other half had thrown both overboard.

* * *

So it wasn't much of a mystery, after all. American labor was the goat sacrificed on Industry's altar of profits.

* * *

Thanks to the Government spending program, however, enough money continued to circulate to maintain the prices which had climbed sharply under the NRA. And as long as there is cash in Uncle Sam's breeches, Industry will probably continue to find purchasers for its products at these higher prices. Therefore, as long as this happy state continues, corporate earnings will probably likewise continue.

* * *

When Hoover went out of office in the spring of 1933, there were about 15 million unemployed Today there are 12 1-2 million. The fact must be borne in mind, however, that the working population has increased in the 7 years since 1929. It is estimated that there are about 2 million more employables now than there were then.

* * *

Shorter hours, fired by legislative enactment which will stand the test of constitutionality is the remedy urged by some students of this perplexing condition.

But at best, from the long range point of view, this is probably nothing more than an expedient of dubious value. It offers little more than the serfdom of continued poverty for America's working millions.

* * *

As time goes on, Capitalistic industry is showing, more and more, its unfitness for leadership. It is too stupid and shortsighted to realize that it is, slowly but surely, killing the goose which lays the golden eggs.

It has the opportunity now, by wise and far-seeing action, to make its position secure. But it offers nothing better than the vapid mouthings of the minions of the DuPont-owned American Liberty League.

* * *

The bitterest enemies of the 'Production for Use' theory are unwittingly, by their selfishness and greed, furnishing the strongest arguments in its favor.

Fights Big Navy

Washington, D. C.—A bitter fight is expected in the House this week or soon on the Navy Department Appropriation bill. Congressman Gerald J. Boileau, Progressive of Wisconsin, is heading the efforts to curtail expenditures for huge warships. Representative Boileau claims that a big navy provides no defense in these modern times in view of the development of submarines, mines, airplanes, and other equipment. The Farmer-Laborites and other liberal and progressive members of the House are lending their support in efforts to reduce the expenditures for big warships.

Income Tax Returns Larger

Congressional leaders are studying the reports showing increasing in revenues from the March income tax returns. They are hopeful that the returns will be large enough so that some deductions can be made in the proposed budget-tax bill soon to be considered in the House

President's Relief Request Will Pass Congress Soon

President Roosevelt's request for a $1,500,000,000 relief appropriation for next year led to clashes of opinion on Capitol Hill but Democratic leaders predicted Congress would approve it.

Republicans and some Democrats were critical but many in both parties conceded the program would pass.

Flood Grips East

Facing the Facts Squarely

"I admit that we have squalor and opulence. You can't opulence without having squalor."—Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia of New York City

—O—

Capitalism, A Collective Disease

Capitalism is a collective evil, despite all the Herbert Hoovers alive. Here's why: you can't blame any one person for the depression or the profit system. We're all to blame—most of us for blindly following the leader.

What is caused by all must be cured by all, eventually. For that reason, the old idea of individualism must pass and collectivism take its place. The co-operative commonwealth, the socialist state—whatever you call it—will be the positive expression of a people who are sick of being exploited under capitalism, and find that "In Union There Is Strength."

—O—

The Herald Discovers Capitalism

The Grand Forks Herald for March 27 comments on "Stakhanoffism," the newest movement in Russia which has for its aim the speeding up of production and quality of manufactured goods by rewarding superior workers.

Paying men a little extra for producing more and better goods is "capitalism," pure and simple, according to the Herald, which goes on to say, "It is probable that if given time the Russians will work their way to an economic system which cannot be distinguished from the capitalism which has been so violently denounced, but which cannot long be avoided in any human society because its principles are inherent in human nature."

It may be too much to expect the Herald editor to distinguish between being paid for services rendered, and plain profiteering, but he should at least understand human nature enough to know that the average man's greatest ambitions is peace and quiet and freedom from worry, so that he can enjoy life to the limit; that this cannot be attained easily under our present system; and that, in the concrete example of Russia, where most of our senseless competition is cut out of everday affairs people are happier and healthier.

Judging from the Herald editor's remarks, one would suppose that the men who built our factories, railroads—our industrial structure—have been amply rewarded for their sacrifice and live in comfort, at least. But the exact opposite is true, and we find that men who exploited these workers revel in luxury.

The fact to bear in mind is that in Russia people don't usually get paid unless they do some useful work.

—O—

"Armaments vs. Social Security"

That is the title of a neat little leaflet recently issued by the National Council for Prevention of War, 532 Seventeenth Street N. W., Washington, D C. It compares the expenditures for Social Security with those for War, and the contrast is startling. We find, for example, that feed for army horses costs more per year, by one half, than services for crippled children; and we also find that while the USA spent 21 million dollars for public health service, it spent over 230 million dollars for replacement of naval vessels.

These leaflets may he had for the asking.

That Brisbanal Sneer

Arthur Brisbane, who has such a reverence for Air Forces—especially the impressive airplanes of his majesty, Il Duce—commented on the recent episode of an Ethiopian plane being shot down by a swarm of Italian planes as a triumph for superior skill.

Can it be that the venerable Arthur is playing crony to Mussolini, or does he forget that sometimes and Italian plane may go crashing? In such a case, it would perhaps be accidental, rather than due to the superior skill of an Abyssinian airman. You see, Air Forces are the acme of modern warfare—if used by the right parties.

$1,100,000 STATE HIGHWAY JOBS TO BE LET ON APRIL 17

INDIANS TRY TO DOUBLE UP WOLF HIDE BOUNTY

Roseau—County officials at Roseau are having quite a time with Indians from Warroad who are trying to double up on the bounty for wolf hides. The red-skins had fixed over the pelts so that the changes had escaped the detection of the town clerk. However, he became suspicious and immediately afterwards called O. A. Brager to examine the pelts and question the Indians. The Red Men were a little leary about trying to collect the money themselves and sent a youngster to collect. Brager, acting on the suggestion of the town clerk, examined the pelts. He found that the wily Indians had sewed new skin on the ears where the punches had been made. They were brought before the sheriff and county attorney for questioning, and after a good scare and lecture they were let go.

No Exceptions to Load Restrictions, Says Chief

Load restrictions placed on trunk highways during the spring break-up must be enforced against school buses and all other vehicles without exception, according to an announcement by W. F. Rosenwald, chief maintenance engineer of the Minnesota highway department.

"We are besieged with requests to exempt certain vehicles from the posted load limits on restricted highways", Mr. Rosenwald said. "This we cannot do. Load limits are put in effect at this season to prevent roads from becoming absolutely impassable and to guard against tremendous damage to the highway system.

"A few weeks inconvenience results for trucks and buses, but this is necessary in the public interest. Hundreds of thousands of dollars damage to our highways would result without the restrictions. We make the load limits as high as possible without sacrificing protection of the road. Since no exceptions can be made to the restrictions, we ask the co-operation of everyone in this effort to protect the highways."

A SALMON TREAT

JUST how are you going to prepare that canned salmon that you are buying or that you bought during National Salmon Week—February 28 to March 7? Salmon is too fine a fish not to pay special attention to the way you cook and serve it. Decorative and delicious it is worth the extra trouble. So here are some timely recipes for serving that succulent fish.

A Large Recipe

Molded Salmon: Soak four tablespoons gelatin in one-half cup cold water for five minutes. Mix together in the top of a double boiler four teaspoons salt, four teaspoons mustard, a few grains cayenne two tablespoons flour and two tablespoons sugar. Add eight egg yolks and mix well. Add slowly six tablespoons butter, three cups milk and three-fourths cup vinegar. Cook until thick, stirring constantly. Add the gelatin and stir until dissolved. Cool. When about to set, add the contents, broken in pieces, of four 1-pound cans salmon. Pour into large wet fish-shaped mold, or into individual molds, and let harden in a cold place. Serves twenty-four or twenty-five.

A Small Recipe

This is the same recipe, made by the same method as that above, but the ingredients are changed, to one tablespoon gelatin, two tablespoons cold water, one teaspoon salt, one teaspoon mustard, a few grains cayenne, two egg yolks, one and a half tablespoons butter, three-fourths cup milk, three tablespoons vinegar and the contents of one 1-pound can salmon. This smaller recipe serves six.

The flour added to the larger recipe is to aid in making the larger quantity hold its shape nicely when unmolded. The sugar in the larger recipe may be omitted, if desired. A small amount of sugar may be added to the small recipe. The slight effect on the finished flavor is not sufficient to make its omission noticeable.*

"You'll have to come back some other time," sighed the husband. "The pocketbook has gone down shopping with my wife."

Deliberation

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "But it's a mistake to think so long as to create the impression that you are composing fiction."

Are Cheap Feeds Cheap When Fed To Develop Early Broilers?

A feed selling at a low cost will not produce sturdy chicks for rapid and uniform growth. You must have a mash so balanced as to get the maximum growth in the shortest time possible. A feed so balanced should produce one pound of flesh for every three pounds of feed consumed. A broiler nine weeks old fed a properly balanced ration should weigh from 1½ to 1¾ pounds. This growth can never be obtained by feeding a mixture largely of mill feeds and lacking in vitamins and digestible protein. For maximum growth, feed LAND O'LAKES STARTING AND GROWING MASHES. Considering results, it will be your cheapest feed.

Where Most of Them Go

"I have come to collect this bill," said the man at the door.

"You'll have to come back some other time," sighed the husband. "The pocketbook has gone down shopping with my wife."

Deliberation

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "But it's a mistake to think so long as to create the impression that you are composing fiction."

Are Cheap Feeds Cheap When Fed To Develop Early Broilers?

A feed selling at a low cost will not produce sturdy chicks for rapid and uniform growth. You must have a mash so balanced as to get the maximum growth in the shortest time possible. A feed so balanced should produce one pound of flesh for every three pounds of feed consumed. A broiler nine weeks old fed a properly balanced ration should weigh from 1¼ to 1½ pounds. This growth can never be obtained by feeding a mixture largely of mill feeds and lacking in vitamins and digestible protein. For maximum growth, feed LAND O'LAKES STARTING AND GROWING MASHES. Considering results, it will be your cheapest feed.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

By ROBERT AMES BENNET

Garth pointed to the wild fowl out in the swamp. They were beginning to flock together with the approach of autumn. "How would you like canvasback or mallard for dinner?"

Her eyes brightened, only to cloud again. "You have no gun."

After looping some thongs to his belt, he went to stack a hollow pile of brush on a forked stub that had broken off from a fallen beech tree. Out in the water, he bobbed under and came up with his head between the forks of the float. The leaves and twigs made a blind from which he could see out without being seen.

He waded, neck deep, up the muskeg stream so slowly that the stub and branches appeared to be an ordinary bunch of driftwood.

When he stepped off over his depth, he began to tread water. By a quiet movement of his hands under the surface, he glided the blind into the midst of a mallard flock. The trick was to grasp a duck's feet and jerk the bird under before it could squawk. He waded back to shore with five dead mallards tied to his belt.

After the meal on roast duck, he set some rabbit snares. He then showed Lilith how to make cords by splitting off strands from peeled spruce roots. While she worked at this, he collected more ducks and hung them over a smudge for smoke curing.

Next came the carving of Eskimo hooks from duck bones. With bait, a catgut leader and a spruce-root line, he began to catch Mackenzie whitefish. Lilith had never seen so beautiful a fresh-water fish.

The newly caught fish proved far better eating than even the best of trout. Mr. Ramill's slight fever gave him a distaste for duck meat and the rabbits that were snared. But he ate his full share and more of the delicious fish.

Besides the cranberries, Lilith gathered black currants and blueberries and mushrooms. More fish were caught than could be eaten fresh. A number were soon on the smoke rack, along with ducks and rabbits. For the present and near future, the question of food had been met.

A cold sleety rainstorm drenched the camp. It brought only temporary discomfort, for Garth kept the fire alive under a slanted heap of spruce boughs. None the less, the storm spurred him to redoubled activity. He knew it to be the forerunner of the autumn blizzards that might now howl down off the snow-clad Selwyns at any time.

While Mr. Ramill's slight fever remained, he said little and seemed to take everything as a matter of course. He had fully recovered from the effects of shock even before the fifth day when the bullet wound through his upper chest began to heal. But with the passing of his feverish condition the irritability of convalescence jabbed him out of his placid contentment.

"Why are you loafing around here, Garth?" he rasped. "Instead of wasting all this time piling up food, you could have made a canoe and run us down across to that refueling post days ago."

Garth swept his right hand edgewise out across his uplifted empty left palm. "No gun—no hides. Dead birch—no bark. No hides, no bark—no canoe."

"Huh! Do you mean to say we'll have to stick here and freeze in your d—d Arctic winter?"

"Growl away, sir," Garth approved. "Sounds good. It means you'll soon be in shape for rafting. As for your question, perhaps you imagine Miss Ramill and I have been heaving that down timber over the bank just for sport."

The millionaire staggered to his feet unaided for the first time since Huxby had shot him down. "A raft! How the devil can you make one if you can't make a canoe? No rope or rawhide thongs to tie the logs together."

Garth supported him over through the spruce thicket to the drop-off of the bank. The wobbly invalid squatted on the brink and stared in surprise. Down the beach, close beside the water, his daughter sat plaiting a great pile of willow withes into a thick line. Before her floated a partly built raft of dead birch tree trunks. The shorter, smaller cross logs were lashed on with spruce roots and plaited-willow tie-lines.

Mr. Ramill's gaze passed over the raft, to peer out across the immense lake-like expanse of the great river. The water was covered with whitecaps, whipped up by the chill northerly wind.

"Raft! Ugh! It's worse out there than the white water when we shot those rapids."

"There'll be plenty of free bathing for us, but no danger of drowning," Garth replied. "Only trouble, this wind would blow us upstream. We'll have to wait for a shift. The only other chance is that one of the boats may be coming out."

"Boats?"

"The supply steamers of the Hudson's Bay company and other traders, taking out the season's cargoes of furs."

The millionaire grunted his relief: "Ugh—steamers! Almost good as a plane."

"If one comes along, and if we see it in time," Garth qualified. "You are rather farsighted. You might watch for smoke downriver."

"I'll do that. D—n your diddling with any raft! Ten to one, you've already let every steamer slip past. All this time with your nose rubbing those d—d logs!"

Garth went down to tell Lilith that her father was by way of being a well man. He sent her to move the camp to a small opening in the thicket, close behind the grumbler. Fuel for a bonfire had already been heaped up on the beach.

But Garth did not count strongly on sighting any steamer. The boats might have lingered at the far-away Arctic trading posts. Delays meant danger of an early blizzard. He rushed his work on the raft. When dusk came, Lilith went on watch, in place of her father. Garth relieved her at midnight. But neither of them saw any light out on the vast expanse of ghostly gleaming whitecaps.

By another sunset Garth had the raft completed to his satisfaction. He had built a superstructure that raised the footing well above the waterline. Rails guarded against the risk of squall waves washing the still weak millionaire overboard. For sweeps, Garth lashed the paddles to poles made of spruce saplings. He rigged other saplings for mast and yardarm, ready to hoist the blanket as a sail in case of a favorable change in the wind.

"Shift or calm, we'll put off at sunrise," he announced.

Though Mr. Ramill grumbled, he ate his fill of broiled whitefish, and rolled up for the night to fall into the healthy heavy sleep of a convalescent. Lilith again took the first watch.

In the midst of his first sleep, Garth opened his eyes with the instant alert wakefulness of a hunter. The girl's hand was on his forehead.

"Yes?" he asked.

"I—I'm not sure," she murmured. "The wind has gone down . . . It looks like a star. But it is so low on the water, I thought I'd better call you."

He rolled from the bed of spruce tips and dry moss. A single glance downriver was enough. He jumped to light the prepared bundle of brush at the smudge-fire and leap with it down the bank.

As the heap of fuel on the beach burst into flame he heard the girl's gasping murmur, close behind his shoulder: "It can't—be a—mistake? You're certain—certain that it's really—"

"A steamer," he replied.

"But what if—if they don't—see us? It's night."

"Darker the better, if no fog. They can't miss seeing this fire."

Garth turned to eye her in the glare of the upflaring fire. He looked at her worn moccasins and lynxskin leggings, at the crude skirt of moose-calf skin and the tattered upper part of the sports dress. He looked at the girl's dope-smeared face and at the tight pigtails of the semi-bobbed hair that had once been so frozen in that modish permanent wave. His gray eyes twinkled in the firelight.

"Well, I'd say you're less a sight than when I first met you."

Her eyes did not twinkle. They flashed. "You'll not have much longer to insult me!"

"You'll Not Have Much Longer to Insult Me."

"I may if you don't fetch the blanket," he said. "A fire on the shore means nothing of itself. Just an Indian camp—John Buck and his squaw. We'll have to signal."

The word sent her bounding up the bank. She came flying back with the blanket. Garth ordered her to hold one corner. He took another. They stood in front of the fire, with the big blanket stretched between them. Mr. Ramill called irritably from the top of the bank. What did they mean, wakening him and taking away his bedding? Lilith cried out the glad news. Garth gave her a curt order to pay attention. At his commands, she began to stoop and rise in unison with him, lowering the blanket to the sand and jerking it up again in front of the fire, at irregular intervals.

After some time he ordered a halt, with the blanket on the ground. He added an explanation: "Those were dots and dashes. We've given the SOS—and my name. They may not have made it out. That light is nearer, but it has not turned. Ready now. We'll repeat."

Above the low-hung star another star flashed on and off. Across the silent, glimmering flood of the river came the hoarse blasts of a steamer's whistle, muffled by distance yet unmistakable.

"All right, Miss Ramill," Garth said. "Tell your maid to pack your luggage."

She asked in a low voice: "Haven't I tried to play up? Is it sporting of you to mock me?"

Her face was shadowed. He could not see the look that went with the questions. After a moment, he answered soberly. "It is not, and you have. Permit me to apologize."

"Is that all?"

"What else?" he replied. "You are of course relieved and pleased to be rid of a man you so thoroughly hate. You may rest assured I will not intrude, once you're aboard ship."

"Yes," she murmured, "when Dad and I no longer have any need of you to—"

Her father came staggering down the bank to thrust in between them. "I say, Garth!—don't lie. Is it true the steamer is putting in for us?"

• • • • • • •

Doubtful of a safe night landing at this unused beach, the steamer captain lay off-shore and sent in a canoe. Garth steadied Mr. Ramill into the birchbark. At the same time Lilith stepped in ahead of her father. She repeated the maneuver when the two Indian paddlers drove the canoe out alongside the little river steamer.

Garth saw no more of the girl until after the steamer tied up at Fort Simpson, the trading post at the mouth of the Liard river. Taken into a stateroom by the wife of a missionary from Fort Norman, she remained in complete seclusion.

Her father kept almost equally close in the skipper's own room. The canny Scot had welcomed the American millionaire to his bunk—for a consideration. The cabin was jammed with fur traders and Fort Norman oil-field officials, who were going outside for the winter. Garth messed and berthed forward with the crew.

He stopped before Garth, bland-faced, shrewd-eyed.

"I've just heard, my boy, that you think of stopping off at this post. I trust it's not on account of any feeling against me or my daughter. You can't blame her for a bit of resentment. She's a woman, and you certainly put her through the mill. As for myself, I called it quits when you pulled me out of the hole this last time. What d'you say?"

He held out his now firm-muscled hand. Garth gave it a hearty grip.

"All accounts squared, sir, and no hard feelings against either of you. Miss Ramill proved herself far more plucky and sporting than could have been expected. I wish you both bon voyage."

"But for you to be leaving the boat, my boy! There's no need of it. I can arrange for you to get into the cabin. In fact, I'd like the opportunity to talk over matters. We might still get together on those terms you offered."

"We might," Garth agreed; but then his smile hardened. "That side of the matter will have to wait. I shall first settle with your friend Huxby."

The millionaire frowned.

"Don't call that murderous hound a friend of mine. His shooting you is understandable. My wounding was of course what he claimed—sheer accident. But for the scoundrel to abandon a helpless girl to starvation! If he was too cowardly to dare her frenzied threats and forcibly take her and me with him in the canoe, he could at least have had the plane come for us."

"If you care for my guess," Garth said, "he was more interested in your daughter as an heiress than as a woman."

"No guess about it. A coldblooded rascal who would have murdered you for your claim! I'll run him down and make him pay in full for deserting Lilith and me, if it costs a million."

"His punishment will cost you nothing, Mr. Ramill. He has been trapped by his own greed."

"Trapped?"

"Before we came aboard, word was received by radio that a man named Huxby had recorded a platinum placer claim at Fort Smith; that he had bought a large airplane, and flown north with three miners."

Mr. Ramill looked his doubts. "I've heard nothing of it."

"Because I though best for you not to."

"You! Do you mean to tell me that everyone on this steamer kept mum because you, a mere prospector—" The millionaire paused. "Have I been blind? You are not a common prospector. There's something about you . . . in spite of your vagabonding about this North country!"

BEARS COMMON IN MANY CCC CAMPS

Cook—The cook at the Portage River CCC camp in the Superior National forest received the shock of his life last week when he opened the ice box door and saw a bear staring him in the face! The enrollee left so fast he didn't even close the door, and when he came back with reinforcements Bruin was gone. Contrary to common belief, bears frequently become very tame, especially during the fall when they frequent human habitation in search of sufficient food fat for the winter. A number of these black animals adopted the Portage River camp recently and became the pets of the enrollees. Another of the cooks at this camp was standing over the stove when he felt a slap on his back. Turning around, he looked full into the face of a black bear, which apparently wanted something to eat. One of the older bears became almost as tame as a dog, and followed the night watchman when he made the rounds of the camp. Deer at this camp also show a decided preference for human friends, and frequently are fed by hand.

COP SHOOTS SELF; RUSHED TO HOSPITAL IN MILK WAGON

Eveleth—Men are men up on the Range and in Eveleth the glory of the police department is second only to that of the milk wagon drivers. A cop who accidentally shot himself in that town the other day had the double ignomy of being rushed to the hospital in a milk wagon. Laying aside his coat and revolver while eating lunch, Officer Anthony J. Strlekar member of the Eveleth police force, dropped the gun on the floor and to his great chagrin shot himself. The cartridge discharged as the gun hit the floor, and the bullet entered Officer Strlekar's left trouser leg, traveling through the fleshy part of his right rear hip and lodging itself in the ceiling. Milk Wagon Driver George Ahlfors, delivering the usual quart at the back door, saw his chance to be a hero, and seizing the striken police officer in his arms, he deposited the wounded one among the milk bottles, whipped up his noble chargers and dashed off to the hospital. Officer Strlekar is recovering from his wounded hip, but his pride may not be mended for some time.

BOTTLES RIDE ON RUNNING BOARD OF CAR FOR 23 MILES

Starbuck—A point for the careful driving of women was scored recently when two empty oil bottles rode on the running board of a car a distance of 23 miles without falling off, the driver being Miss Louise Tharaldson. S. O. Koland filled the crank case of her car at Starbuck, forgetting to take off the two empty bottles from the running board. Miss Tharaldson also did not notice the bottles and drove to Hancock, 23 miles away, the bottles falling to the ground when she opened the door to get out.

commissioner was elected state executive secretary succeeding Miss Irene Welby. Senator H. A. Bridgeman of Bemidji was selected ninth district committeeman, to take the place of Paul Harris, who was elected at the Erskine convention when the latter was elevated to the presidency.

Outstanding planks in the platform includes a provision for national legislation prohibiting child labor; regulation of working hours and wages in industry; old age and social insurance; limiting the terms of office of members of the United States Supreme Court to ten years, in place of life; government ownership of banks and monopolized industries; production for use by the unemployed; insuring neutrality by an embargo on shipments of goods to warring nations; government manufacture of munitions; support of the Benson-Amlie youth bill; passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill; opposition to fascism and dictatorships.

State legislation proposed include: reforestation and conservation; reduction of interest rates; state workmen's compensation insurance; payment in full of state aid to schools; increases in the higher brackets of net income taxes; an inheritance tax; party designation of candidates for the legislature; opposition to military training; fostering of co-operatives; a civil service law for state employees; co-operative and state owned power development; adequate unemployment insurance and relief.

Floyd B. Olson was unanimously endorsed for United States senator and following a hectic debate on the question of endorsing two candidates for each office, a resolution to such an effect was voted down Hjalmer Petersen who was a strong contender for the nomination for governor, and whose supporters had asked the dual endorsements, withdrew from the race and seconded the nomination of Elmer A. Benson. A unanimous endorsement followed.

Three men, Howard Y. Williams Gottfried Linsten and H. G. Teigan were nominated for lieutenant governor, Linsten winning the nomination on the second ballot following the elimination of Teigan. Harry H. Peterson was unanimously endorsed for re-election at attorney general and Dr Paul Hartig secured the nomination for secretary of state over John Nordin of Columbia Heights. C. A. Halverson of Revere was unanimously endorsed for state treasurer when Elmer Holm of Dilworth announced that a nomination of Paul Rasmussen would not be made. He seconded the nomination of Halverson.

John Bernard of Eveleth made a strong bid for the endorsement for railroad and warehouse commissioner but was outdistanced by Hjalmer Petersen by a vote of 2[illegible] to 373. Edwin I. Hudson received 27 votes. Arthur Carlson of Plummer, after having been placed in nomination withdrew his name.

A resolution calling for the formation of a national party was passed and a sheaf of resolutions that were not reached before adjournment and the report of the legislative committee were referred to the central committee for consideration. Howard Y. Williams, organizer for the national third party stated that there will be conferences held at Chicago next month, preliminary to calling for a national third party convention.

Soil Meetings

(2). By paying them certain cash benefits for doing so.

Q. What kinds of payments will be made and how much will each be?

A. The payments will be of two kinds, the first and most important for shifting from crops that are "hard" on the soil or encourage washing, to soils that add fertility or are comparatively "easy" on the soil and prevent washing. This payment will vary according to the productivity of the soil, but for the United States as a whole will average about $10 per acre. A second type of payment may be made for each acre of crop land in the farm used for soil building and soil conserving crops in 1936. This may not exceed one dollar per acre or $10 per farm, whichever payment is larger.

Q. Which crops are classified as "hard" on the soil, or soil depleting, and which as soil conserving or soil building?

A. The soil depleting crops include, in general, the various cultivated crops, such as corn, potatoes, sugar beets, etc, truck and canning crops, grain sorghums and sweet sorghums, when harvested for grain or hay annual grasses and legumes, such as millet, Sudan grass, soybeans and field peas, when cut for grain or hay, and idle land, unless otherwise classified by the Secretary on recommendation of the State Committee. The soil improving crops, in general, include the various clovers, alfalfa, other legumes, and long-lived grasses, when handled according to the government regulations. Forest trees are also included

Q. What will be the base for determining changes in farming practices entitling the farmer to his payments?

A. The base for an individual farm will be the total acreage in soil depleting crops in 1935, modified as the community committee finds necessary to allow for unusual conditions and to equalize it with other bases in the community.

CCC May Hold an Enrollment Here

Another CCC enrollment is expected to be held at the Pennington county court house between April 6th and April 14th, county auditor Arthur Senstad announced this week

No quota has been set, Mr. Senstad stated, but enrollment is limited to boys from families that are receiving some form of local, state, WPA or rural resettlement aid.

Re-enlistments can be made by boys that have been in the CCC before providing they can show an honorable discharge and were in the service not less than four consecutive months. Boys must have passed their 17th birthday and must not have attained their 29th birthday. The court room will be used for the examination, Mr. Senstad stated.

Grygla M-M Dealers Entertain on Monday

Spectacular drama of the modern tractor industry was portrayed on Monday afternoon, March 30th at the RNA Hall at Grygla, when the Minneapolis-Moline Co. with Sandberg and Bjertness as local dealers put on their show, "Power on Parade."

"Power" was the theme of the story and throughout the action packed first reel the onlooker has a "front seat" on an exciting trip through a maze of fire, gears, machinery and gigantic factories with all this exciting action set to specially written music and played by a thirty piece Symphony Orchestra.

White hot metal carries out the "power" theme in many interesting shots and "Power" is the prevailing note as testing, forging, drilling and assembling reveals the romance of industry and gives the uninitiated an inside slant on how tractors and farm tools are manufactured.

27 Local Home Owners Get Fed. HOLC Loans

Home owners in Pennington County have received 27 individual loans from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation totaling $33,919 according to an announcement made by Anna Dickie Olesen, State Director for the National Emergency Council.

The total amount of money loaned by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Minnesota, as of January 2, 1936 was $46,042,649, involving 20,163 individual loans. The corporation ceased accepting applications for loans June 27, 1935

These loans, representing long term obligations, were granted at low rates of interest to those who were in urgent need of funds for the protection and preservation of their homes, and who were unable to procure the needed credit thru the normal channels, Mrs. Olesen states. A great majority of the distressed individuals, taking advantage of the assistance offered by this Federal agency, were helped to refinance defaulting mortgages and save their homes from foreclosure.

Townsend Meeting At Auditorium Sun.

What the Townsend plan will do for the young people and what it can mean in the economic recovery of the country will be explained by speakers who have made a thorough study of it, at the city auditorium on Sunday afternoon, according to an announcement made this week.

The plan is not a scheme to benefit the elderly people of the country, but a plan to restore prosperity by putting men, young men and women, to work at desirable and constructive employment at wages that will insure a respectable living on American standards the announcement states. In carrying out this plan, the older people of the country will become the receivers of deferred dividend on the labor they have performed in building up the country. The plan is of far more importance to the young people than to the old, the sponsors claim.

The meeting will open at the city auditourium at 4:00 p. m., Sunday, and admission will be free. The general public is invited.

Muskrat Season Is Extended to April 15

The 1936 open season for muskrats, previously authorized by the Conservation Commission, will extend from March 25 to April 13 inclusive in designated counties, it was announced last week by A. C. Hanson, director of the division of game and fish.

The open season applies to the following counties only: Lake of the Woods, Koochiching, Itasca, St. Louis, Hubbard, Cass, Aitkin, Carlton, Wadena, Crow Wing, Pine, Todd, Morrison Benton, Mille Lacs, Kannabec, Stearns, Isanti, Chisago, Sherburne, Anoka, Wright Meeker, Hennepin, Washington, Carver, Scott, Dakota, LeSueur, Rice Goodhue, Wabasha, Waseca, Steele, Dodge, Olmsted, Winona, Freeborn, Mower, Fillmore, and Houston

Waters adjacent to and forming a boundary between an open and closed county may be considered open for the trapping of muskrats.

The law provides that no person shall set or use more than 50 traps for muskrats and that no person shall set, visit, or remove any muskrats between 8 P. M. and 6 A. M.

Trappers' licenses are for sale at local County Auditor's offices at $1 each. Persons trapping on land owned or leased by them are not required to obtain licenses.

Fur buyers must obtain their licenses from the offices of the division of game and fish, which will supply information and order blanks for such licenses.

Attempt to Dismiss Pro-Labor Professors

As a result, a purge may be attempted on the campus of the University of California, which if successful, would lead to the dismissal of a famous law professor and an equally reputable economics instructor.

The episode dates from the time Prof. Max Radin noted for his researches in the history of law, and Prof. Harry Conover of the University of California's economics department, spoke at a San Francisco mass meeting called by 35 unions.

The gathering was called to protest the arrest of eight West Coast sailors on a charge of "dynamiting" and conspiring to destroy property. West Coast labor circles call the whole case a frame-up engineered by Standard Oil Co. As a result, labor and liberal groups have banded together to defend the eight "Modesto"—the name of the town in which they were arrested—sailors. Standard Oil Products, in addition, have been placed on labor's boycott lists.

The two professors have been charged by District Attorney Leslie Cleary with "consorting with such people as Harry Bridges and Ella Winter". Bridges is a San Francisco militant labor leader, and Ella Winter is the wife of Lincoln Steffins, famous author.

The Vogue for TOMATOES

THE vogue for red this season has extended even to vegetables. You see red coats wherever you walk abroad, and you eat red dishes whenever you sit down to table. We may be in the red in our dress, but the red is in us when it comes to eating. And that makes for good red blood because our principal red food—tomatoes—is one of the very best sources of vitamin C and a good source of vitamins A, B and G. And canned tomatoes are now said to be an even better source of vitamin C than raw tomatoes cooked in the usual way at home

So What?

So let's see if we can't think up some more dishes in which this fashionable color appears in the shape of canned tomatoes Here's a "honey" which is not only new but which contains some honey in its makeup:

Oriental Onion and Tomatoes

Peel twelve large white onions, cut them in halves crosswise and lay them in a baking dish. Melt four tablespoons butter, add one cup strained tomatoes, one-fourth cup strained honey, salt and pepper to taste and a few grains paprika, and heat to boiling. Pour over onions and bake until tender—from one hour to an hour and a half—in a slow or 350-degree oven. Serves six.*

WILLIAMS TALKS TO FULL HOUSE THURSDAY EVE.

Cites Possibilities Offered by Production for Use Instead of Profit

Howard Y Williams, national organizer for the third party movement, spoke at a meeting of the Thief River Falls farmer-labor club at the court house last Thursday evening. A full house listened attentively to his speech dealing with the possibilities of changing economic conditions for the better for the masses of the people in the state of Minnesota if the farmer-labor forces are placed in control of state government.

He called attention to the enormous labor power going to waste thru the unemployment conditions and showed what production for use instead of for profit could accomplish if the state was to place these people at work on the raw materials and natural resourses so plentiful in this state. Referring to the last session of the legislature he cited from the records the deplorable representation this district has had from its senator whom he characterized as a half and halfer who must have something the matter with one of his eyes since he can see right only half of the time and representative Waldal who was wrong every time. He paid a fine compliment to representative J. O. Melby for a splendid record. Mr. Melby voted 15 times right in fifteen roll calls and thus has a 100 percent record, Mr. Williams said.

Fred C. Proehl, formerly of this city also spoke shortly emphasizing some of the points made by Mr. Williams. Paul A. Harris made a short report of the state farmer-labor convention. A lunch was served after the program

Mr. Williams spoke on Friday afternoon at Gonvick and on Friday evening at Shevlin.

"Mrs. Determan has the necessary qualifications to carry out the farmer-labor program of benefitting the underprivileged and insecure", the governor stated in announcing the appointment. "Her appointment is no more political than that of her predecessor, "Mrs. Determan was endorsed by the recent convention of the farmer-labor women's clubs held at St. Paul.

Arthur Nelson is valedictorian of his class with a total of 45 1-2 honor points to his credit He has been an outstanding student thruout his high school career, both in his class work and in extra-curricular activities. To Victor Jung, president of the senior class and second-ranking student, goes the honor of delivering the salutatory address at the commencement exercises in June. The other honor students, in the order of their rank are as follows: Edna Lee Jack Booren, Stanley Mortenson, Edna Swanson, Alice Ann Severson, Margaret Larson, Ethel Parnow, Thelma Kolden, Malcolm Magnuson, and Oscar Bickley.

In concluding the assembly, Mr. Claffy enumerated the various awards given in recognition of scholastic and extra-curricular achievements, addressing his remarks especially to the under-classmen, and urging them to endeavor to make their high school courses as successful as possible.

Dogs Kill Deer South of Plummer

State game warden Leo J Peyton was called to Oklee this week to assist Warden Borchert from Winger in rounding up dogs that were said to have been killing deer in the territory southeast of Plummer.

Investigation proved eighteen deer had been killed by dogs in that vicinity, Mr. Peyton stated and several of the killers were rounded up and shot. While there are some wolves in the country, deer killed by wolves are easily identified because of the fact that the wolves always attack the deer at the throat and they eat the major part of the carcass. Dogs, on the other hand, bring the deer down by hamstringing them, Mr. Peyton stated, and the deer carcasses found had hardly been touched after the kill.

The wardens ask all sportsmen in the territory to be on the lookout for game killing dogs and report them immediately. He urges farmers to watch their dogs, if they get a habit of running at large too much, they may be running game. No one likes to kill a good dog, Mr. Peyton said, and he suggests that if dogs are properly fed at home and trained, they will not kill game. He asks dog owners to co-operate in conserving the wild life of the region.

In order to qualify for this relief aid, the county found it necessary to appoint a man to keep records and make proper returns to the state, and due to the fact that the same man can also take care of the surplus commodities which the federal government has to distribute, the commissioners decided to take the proposition on trial for a period The county can terminate the assistance any time

Draft of Farmer-Labor Party 1936 Platform Adopted by State Convention

The platform on which the Farmer-Labor party will stand in its 1936 campaign was adopted Saturday night by the state convention in St. Paul. The full text of the document follows:

The Farmer-Labor Association in convention assembled in March, 1936, hereby renews its pledge to use its every effort to bring about an economic system in both state and nation that will function for the general welfare of the entire people, enabling all to be assured of the fullest opportunities to provide for their material needs during their working years and to enjoy adequate protection in sickness and old age as a right—not as charity.

The Farmer-Labor party of Minnesota recognizes that the United States has the most wonderful natural resources, great factories and machinery of production and power, with millions of capable workers and farmers ready and able to produce food, clothing and shelter in great abundance for all. At this time, when all could live in prosperity and happiness, we find that there are millions of working men and women in poverty, want and degradation and hundreds of thousands of farmers businessmen and professional people who have become poverty stricken and bankrupt.

We favor reforms in taxation, finance in order that the cost of government shall be borne by those best able to pay Production control can do but little in alleviating present distress, and are only justified as temporary expedients to meet an emergency. The program of the present system constitutes a planned poverty; we advocate and demand a system of planned plenty. To effect a cure for economic ills changes must be fundamental.

Natural resources and monopolized industry essential to our national life and well being must ultimately be collectively owned and operated, to the end that democracy shall prevail in our industrial as well as in our political life.

No lasting recovery from the depression and no permanent prosperity can be achieved unless the homes and property of the farmers, the wage earners and the professional people and small business men are fully protected, and the opportunity to own homes and property is restored to the masses by production of plenty.

To achieve these ends we propose and recommend:

1. An amendment to the constitution of the United States empowering the congress to pass laws eliminating child labor, regulating working conditions in industry, regulating agricultural and industrial production, providing security against old age, unemployment and sickness and providing for government ownership of banking and monopolistic industries, except independent banks not affiliated with the chain banks and are locally owned.

2. An amendment to the constitution of the United States reducing the term of office of federal judges from life to a term of not more than 10 years.

3. Legislation by congress:

A. Insuring individual ownership of farms and farm homes by refinancing the farmer at a low rate of interest. (Frazier-Lemke bill).

B. Extending government credits to farmers and workers co-operatives for the purchase of plants for processing and sale of their products at a fair price based upon the cost of production.

C. Providing for the governmental operation of idle productive industrial units by the unemployed for the production of goods for the use of the unemployed.

D. Insuring the neutrality of the United States in any foreign war by prohibiting the sale and delivery of goods to nations engaged in warfare.

E. Making illegal the granting of price rebates and advertising credits by manufactures to chain stores in discrimination against independent merchants and asking for further appropriations for the investigation of these and other unfair trades practices against independent merchants.

F. Providing adequate sums for a youth program designed to give our youth an opportunity for education and work. (Benson-Amlie bill).

G. Providing for government ownership and operation of plants for the manufacture of armaments and munitions of war.

H. As a further means of preventing war we demanded the conscription of wealth in the event of war.

I Providing pensions for the widows and orphans of war veterans.

J. Ratifying a treaty with Canada for the building of the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes waterway.

K. Giving the American market to the American farm.

L. We favor immediate establishment by the federal or state government, or both of a housing program providing adequate and helpful housing at reasonable rents and employing union building tradesmen at union scales.

M. That congress exercise exclusive and constitutional power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

N. That we fight for passage of the Frazier-Lundeen bill.

The Farmer-Labor Association being strongly opposed to dictatorship, calls upon the people of the United States to fight against the activities of those who advocate the establishment of a despotic dictatorship and tyranny in the United States and it is the duty of the people to protect and fight for our democratic form of government and for the freedom of speech freedom of the press and lawful assemblage.

Legislation by the state:

We favor conservation of soil and forests; reforestation of depleted reserves; conservation of water supplies.

We advocate a reduction of the legal and contract rate of interest.

We advocate an adequate and effective license tax on oleomargarine and all butter substitutes sold and used in the state of Minnesota.

We advocate an extension of the mortgage moratorium law.

We advocate a just and adequate unemployed insurance law.

We advocate a generous old age pension law.

We advocate an amendment of the state constitution giving the state right to establish minimum wages in industries and maximum hours of employment.

We advocate a law providing for state fund workmen's compensations.

We advocate substantial increased benefits under the workmen's compensation act for permanent partial disability.

We support the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively.

We pledge our support to all workers in their struggle for higher wages and better working conditions. We are against importation or use of thugs and strikebreakers in labor disputes.

We reaffirm our beliefs in equality of educational opportunities, and therefore propose the use of income taxes to decrease local school levies payment of all special state aid in full, uniform budgetry procedure as opposed to straight-jacket expenditure-control legislation, creation of a more extensive program for youth between the ages of 16 and 21.

We oppose compulsory military training at all educational institutions supported wholly or in part by state funds.

We advocate that all candidates for the state legislature be elected by party designation.

We oppose the adoption of proposed constitutional amendment No. 1.

We are unalterably opposed to a general sales tax.

We favor an improved chain store tax for the benefit of the independent merchant and the consumer

We favor amending the corporate excess tax law to a flat 20-mill rate on all corporate excess.

We advocate an increase on money and credits tax to five mills.

We advocate an increase on graduated net income taxes and on income taxes and on inheritance and gift taxes in the higher bracket, all of which would bring an addition of millions of dollars into the state treasury to relieve the unfair tax now carried by property.

We advocate the formation of consumers co-operatives, credit unions, co-operative banking and service organizations, including co-operative enterprises for health, housing and rural electrification.

We advocate a civil service law.

Realizing the importance of power in modern industry and home life, we propose the adoption of the power plan of the state planning board, providing for the creation of a state advisory power commission to make a survey of the actual and potential power capacity and need of the state; determining the cost of generating and distribution of power, setting up economic power districts into which municipally-owned plants and rural electric co-operatives may form into leagues of municipalities for the generation and distribution of power and urging the removal of all legislative restrictions to the formation of such leagues of municipalities and co-operatives.

We recognize the duty of the state to the unemployed and pledge the full resources and power of the state to the end that suffering and destitution among the unemployed and needy shall be eliminated.

U Committee Studies Health Science Field

The relationships between medicine, dentistry and pharmacy, together with the likelihood, or wisdom of bringing about closer cooperation in teaching these three branches of health science are being considered by a special committee at the University of Minnesota, recently appointed by President L. D Coffman.

When he appointed the committee Dr. Coffman pointed out that at one time specialization made it desirable for each group to work along its own lines, but that the development of science has now brought about a situation in which the knowledge possessed by each group is necessary to all the others. A much greater interdependence exists than did formerly.

No definite policy for the future has been decided upon, but the committee has been asked to inspect possibilities and see how far further cooperation among the health sciences can be carried.

Recently at Minnesota the College of Engineering and Architecture the School of Chemistry and the School of Mines and Metallurgy were consolidated into the new Institute of Technology.

Nursing, fourth of the health sciences, is already included in the setup of one of the existing colleges.

On the committee are two from each of the health groups, under chairmanship of Dr. Guy Stanton Ford, dean of the Graduate School. Members from Pharmacy are Professors Gustav Bachman and Charles H. Rogers; from Dentistry, Professor Charles E. Rudolph and Carl O. Flagstad, and from Medicine, Professor E. T. Boll and J. C. McKinley.

The project is another of the many steps the University of Minnesota is continually making to study its own organization and seek improvements in its procedures.

Finds Human Nature Changed in Russia

Russia can and is changing human nature as we know it, Dr. Frankwood D. Williams, internationally known psychiarist, told University of Minnesota students recently at their weekly convocation. Russia, by birth control and by training children through formative stages of life and later education is able to build up attitudes toward their environment, Dr. Williams said. Where children are born only when wanted by parents, he said, where children are raised with others of their own age and where education is prescribed, human nature can be changed.

100,000 Skilful and Courteous Telephone Operators at Your Command

Your telephone service is a nation-wide service. It must be nation-wide to meet the needs of all telephone users.

While most of your calls probably are made to persons in your own community, you never know when you may need to call someone hundreds of miles away. It is because you and other telephone users may have need for service anywhere that telephones are connected into a nation-wide network—that you have at your command telephone workers in every part of the United States.

There are about 250,000 workers in the operating companies of the Bell System—100,000 of them telephone operators—local operators, long distance operators, information operators and many others. Operators like all other employees in the Bell System are carefully trained. They take pride in providing you and other Americans with efficient and courteous telephone service.

Back of these quarter million Bell System workers is the advisory staff of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the scientists in the Bell Telephone Laboratories and the manufacturing facilities of the Western Electric Company.

We can serve you and our other customers better and at lower charges because unified departments of the Bell System supply advice and assistance to all Bell operating companies, carry on research to improve service and to keep down its cost, and manufacture standardized equipment of high quality for the use of all.

SEAFOODS

Are Smart

THE smart hostess serves seafoods today because she knows that they taste almighty good. She serves anchovies, caviar, clams, lobster, oysters, roe, salmon, shad, shrimp, tuna fish and turtle among others; and she serves them in the middle west as much as she does on either coast because she knows that she can get all of these excellent seafoods in cans. One of the most delicious seafoods is shrimp. Here are some new and interesting ways to serve it.

For That Special Party

Shrimp Appetizer: Combine three-fourths cup chili sauce, one teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, two tablespoons lemon juice, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one tablespoon grated horseradish and two drops tabasco sauce, and chill thoroughly. Remove viscera from two small cans of shrimp, being careful not to break them. Chill them well. Divide the cocktail sauce among eight small glasses, and sprinkle with chopped green pepper. Set glasses in small bowls of crushed ice, if possible. If not, set on small paper doilies on glass plates. Then hook the shrimp over the rims of the glasses, using from four to six to a glass. Serves eight.

Shrimp in Pineapple Aspic: Soften one tablespoon gelatin in four tablespoons cold water. Drain one cup Hawaiian pineapple tidbits, add four tablespoons lemon juice to the syrup and then enough water to make two cups of liquid. Bring to boiling, pour over gelatin, add four tablespoons sugar and stir until dissolved. Put a shrimp from a 5¾-ounce can and several pineapple tidbits into each of eight individual molds and add a couple of spoonfuls of gelatin. Let harden in ice-box. Add another layer of shrimp, tidbits and gelatin, and let harden. Do this until molds are full. Chill. Serve on lettuce with mayonnaise garnish. Serves eight.*

Arthur Myrom was released from the hospital on Tuesday. He recently underwent an operation for appendicitis.

—O—

Miss Harris Lamson, member of the local faculty, is spending her Easter vacation in St. Paul.

—O—

Miss Stella Myrom, Concordia College student, will arrive from Moorhead, Minnesota, today to spend until Tuesday in this city visiting with her parents Mr. and Mrs. Sigurd Myrom.

"A man ought never to learn to do card tricks."

'Why not?"

"If he wins in a card game everybody looks suspicious, and if he doesn't win everybody laughs."

Hopeless Outlook

Patient—Yes, doctor, the four other doctors seem to disagree with your diagnosis.

Doctor—But I know I'm right and post mortem will show I'm right.

Who Lies Here?

"Behind the altar," he told them, "lies Richard the Second. In the churchyard outside lies Mary Queen of Scots, also Henry the Eighth. And who," he demanded, halting above an unmarked flagstone, "who do you think is a-lying 'ere?"

"Well," answered a nearby tourist, "I don't know for sure, but I have my suspicions."

MIDDLE RIVER

Miss Ruth Parbo, who has visited her sister Mrs. Simon Bloom here all winter, left Thursday for her home at Lancaster.

Emil Peterson recently completed his big job of coal hauling for the CCC camp. There were six tons of the coal and the total weight moved was 288 tons.

Middle River has been asked to give $10.00 to the flood relief fund. The Gleaners at their meeting at Mrs. Stephens' last Tuesday pledged $3 00 and the L. D. R. have promised $2.00.

Lenny Peterson who sustained a broken leg on February 29 while assisting in the ice hauling for the creamery, has had quite a long seige of invalidism. He is still confined to the house being only able to walk from room to room by the aid of crutches.

The three act play, "The Strange Request", presented at the Woodman hall Thursday evening by the high school pupils was well received by the large audience. With the exception of Orville Olson, who is an alumni of the school, the entire cast was made up of present day pupils of the school, consisting of the following, Reuben Engevik, Bernard Engevik, Gerald Carrier, Marian Anderson, Olga Underdahl, Lillian Peterson, Rachel Holm, Mildred Thompson and Donna Schenkey.

Mail carrier Albert Stephens, who operates a long rural route northeast of town and has been obliged to use horses for several weeks past on account of drifted roads has recently fixed up a snowmobile. He utilized an old Model T Ford, replacing the front wheels with metal runners three feet long and six inches wide, and widening the rear carrying surface by firmly attaching two extra wheels to each of the hind wheels. The vehicle will thus travel safely over the drifts that were impassable for an ordinary automobile.

The next meeting of the Women's Club will be with Mrs. Carrier on Friday, April 17.

Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, who lives adjacent to the CCC camp, where Mr. Henderson is employed, were guests of Mr. and Mrs Kruger in town Sunday.

Oscar Schenkey's snow plow has recently opened up the road four miles west from town which is quite a relief to several of the farmers in that neighborhood.

Presidents Take Office Younger; Die Younger

Recent investigations in connection with the ceremonies which marked the 75th anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's first inauguration have revealed some interesting facts on the ages of our Presidents. It was discovered that Abraham Lincoln's age at his first inauguration was the average age at which the last ten Presidents of this country took office. This information comes from Dr. Louis A. Warren, Director of The Lincoln National Life Foundation, who points out the Presidents of this country have gradually been younger and younger men. This study was made on the lives of the thirty Presidents of the United States who have passed on.

"At the time of inauguration, the first ten Presidents averaged 59 years of age," Dr. Warren said, "the second ten, 54, and the third ten, 52. Lincoln was the same age as the lowest average.

"In spite of the fact that our Presidents are becoming younger, they are not living to such a ripe old age as formerly. The first ten Presidents died at an average of 77, the next ten passed away at an average of 66, and the third group of ten Presidents lived to an average of but 63 years.

"The first ten Presidents lived an average of fourteen years after retirement from the White House," said Dr. Warren, "but the last twenty Presidents have only lived an average of seven years after laying aside their presidential robes."

Value of a Banking Connection

Unless you organize your life and your business in the way that people did many, many years ago when goods were exchanged from hand to hand or actual money exchanged for goods, you are going to have to use banking facilities. If you are ambitious and want to get on, the time will come when you will want to borrow some money. The banking system was created to meet a need, just as was the self-binder and other modern labor-saving machines.

Make a good banking connection and keep it. You want your banker to know you and you want to know your banker. We believe that you will like to do business with us. Come in and get acquainted.

If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the Constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by any amendment in the way in which the Constitutional designates. But let there be no change by usurption; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed.—George Washington.

CAN AMERICA CARRY HER LIQUOR!

The above question is one that every American who has any regard for the future of his country and his race may well ask himself. Furthermore, it is a question he can not brush aside merely by saying that prohibition was a failure. If prohibition was a failure then legal liquor is even a more ghastly failure, and it would seem to be time to devise other remedies. Legal liquor has not reduced drinking but has increased it a thousand fold.

Statistics of the National Safety Council indicates that the number of "had been drinking" drivers in fatal accidents increased in 1934 over 1933 by 21 percent while the "had been drinking" pedestrian accidents increased in the same period by 53 percent. The Keeley Institute reports a 14 percent increase of women patients this year. We were told in prohibition days that legal liquor would reduce drinking among the youth, but a survey of the dance halls and beer parlors in any city; and citizens of Thief River Falls need not go to neighboring towns to find it; will prove that liquor consumption among youth has increased alarmingly. Furthermore, legal profits have built a legal liquor trade interlocked with other business which can and will use its respectable standing in the community in opposition to public officials and newspapers which dare to raise their voices in protest. And this newspaper has felt that pressure.

It is perhaps futile to argue against the evil. Certainly the public appears to be so calloused and indifferent that to try to stem the headlong rush over the precipice is like spitting against a strong north wind. Nevertheless, we point out that this is a highspeed age. Fast motor cars and intricate machinery require a sober nation. Perplexing social and economic problems need clear heads and keen judgment, neither of which can exisit with carusals, beer and booze. Your boy or your girl may be the next victim. You had better think it over.

THE DECADENCE OF JURISPRUDENCE

Bruno Hauptmann is dead, and with his judicial murder, the most sordid chapter in the history of American jurisprudence is closed. What additional chapters may be written before the Lindberg baby's abduction and killing is finally a closed book is problematic. Certainly very few persons will contend that all the truth in this case has been made known.

Hauptmann was probably guilty, or if not the actual killer, so closely affiliated with the crime that to confess would only have implicated others without saving himself. Therefore if one murder can be atoned for by another even more minutely planned and premeditated, then society has had its justice.

If on the other hand, justice was miscarried, the incident is merely another, and of less consequence than other cases on record. The infamy of the case lies in the cruel, inhuman, blasphemous handling of the news by the daily press of the nation. If headlines are any criterion, the dailies hailed the abduction and killing of the baby as a Godsend from heaven destined to fill their coffers with the nickels of sensation-seeking morons. If printed reports told even half the truth, the scenes in the court room were a bizarre travesty on justice. Prosecutor Wilentz speech to the jury brands him as a wretch that should be disbarred. If there were powerful forces much interested in seeing Hauptmann go to the chair for the murder, there were apparently also other powerful influences interested in seeing him acquitted, judging from the defense, he, an unknown alien with a petty criminal record was enabled to put up against his prosecution.

Clarence Darrow has chacterized the whole trial as a farce and a travesty on justice. It is a farce that every decent citizen may well wish could be stricken from the records. The decadence of Rome was not more pronounced than the decadence of American jurisprudence.

JUST BY WAY OF COMPARISON

The state of Minnesota has been faced with an unprecedented expense in keeping the trunk highways open this winter. Due to the heavy snows and storms the snow removal is said to have cost about one million dollars. A considerable sum of money, but in view of the fact that business as well as the general welfare of the people are dependent upon open roads, it was money well spent.

A news item tells us that the Dawes bank in Chicago; the bank which closed after receiving a subsidy from the Reconstruction Finance corporation of something like 80 million dollars in the days that Hoover saw recovery just around the corner; has repaid about 20 millions. The report states that this is about all that the government will get in the course of liquidation.

Minnesota is a big state, and snow removal is costly, but the sum that will be charged off the "Dawes loan" would have been sufficient to keep Minnesota highways open for sixty winters as tough as the past one.

THE YOUNG REPUBLICANS INVITE YOUTH

The young republicans of Minnesota (average age 65) held a conference at the Twin Cities last week end invited the young farmer-laborites "who are dissatisfied with their party" to join with them.

While we have heard of no dissatisfied element among the younger farmer-laborites, it would be interesting to know just what the republicans have to offer them. We take it for granted that Herbert Hoover is still the chief spokesman for the republicans, inasmuch as we have heard no report to the contrary. We quote from Mr. Hoover's address to the young republicans of Colorado:

"Did it ever occur to you that all the people who run this complicated machine are going to die? Just as sure as death the job is yours".

The promise may perhaps extend a lot of hope to the sons of captains of industry. When the old man dies they will inherit the job. In the meantime they can continue to disport themselves in their high-priced motor cars at California and Florida beaches. However, so far as we know there are few of these within the ranks of the farmer-labor party. Inasmuch as the best that Mr. Hoover's promise holds out to the average youth is to inherit his dad's job if he has not already been displaced by a machine, and his debts, it may hold scant appeal.

So far as we can determine from present indications there is small demand for men to run "this complicated machine" and statistics indicate that there are five to eight million potential candidates for the jobs among the unemployed between the ages of 19 and 29 years.

Assuming that these have indeed an opportunity for getting a foothold in this scarcity system, Mr. Hoover still leaves unsolved the problem confronting the rest of the fifteen millions of unemployed.

Everything considered, we are afraid that the invitation extended by the republicans to youth will be greeted with a loud and raucous "Oh Yeah!".

DISTURBING REFLECTIONS

By George H. Shoaf

In a recent address at Sacramento Governor Frank M. Merriam, referring to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, said:

"History will show that Providence raised the proper man to meet the present emergency and will demonstrate, I think, that the man who now holds the presidency was just the one to meet the situation."

This from Frank Merriam, the California governor whom many suspect consciously sanctioned the theft of the governorship from Upton Sinclair in the last state election, who sent state troops to break with force and violence the San Francisco strike, who all his life has been the political playboy for big business and who, unquestionably, is the most reactionary governor California ever had.

Which invokes some disturbing cogitations.

Every student of the American scene agrees that President Roosevelt saved American Capitalism from revolution, perhaps collapse, when he took the reins of government. Unable to avoid disaster, business men and bankers applauded the president's initiative and took advantage of the situation which followed.

Under Roosevelt's administration the major corporations prospered, the banks resumed business, capital continued to concentrate, while multiplied millions of plain people were placed upon the dole.

As far as the common people of this country are affected, except for the artificial atmosphere generated by the presidential voice and smile, the economic outlook is no better now than it was when President Hoover went back to private life.

Yet, apparently big business, and the political spokesmen for big business, are united to encompass Rooosevelt's downfall.

Why the viciousness of attack upon the president over the radio, from the platform and through the columns of the press? Those who profited most from his administration seem most interested in his defeat. Is their attack inspired by the thought that if it is sufficiently bitter and unfair, the very manner of attack will win him friends; that they wish not his defeat but his re-election?

Carter Harrison ,the elder, was repeatedly elected mayor of Chicago because the newspapers and big business always united against him. And nobody served his alleged enemies better than he. Bryan Callaghan, many times mayor of San Antonio, Texas, encountered the same experience in his campaigns. When Grover Cleveland became the target in the vilest mud-slinging onslaught ever waged in our national politics, he knew his election to the presidency was sure.

While American voters are not politically wise, they still cherish a love for fair play. Roosevelt is denounced as a Socialist and Communist when every voter not absolutely blind knows that he is neither. His supreme contribution is that in every movement he has made and every policy he has projected his one big purpose was the preservation of the principle and practice of private ownership for private profit and the right of the individual to private initiative without let or hindrance—a contribution which contradicts everything for which Socialism and Communism stand.

Is it posible that Governor Merriam in his Sacramento address, voiced the secret wishes of America's plunderbund, inadvertently let the cat out of the bag when he expressed the statement quoted in the beginning of this editorial?

BITING THE HAND
(The Progressive)

John T. Flynn, nationally known economist, in a recent article pointed out that about half of the emergency expenses of the government are due to a dole to business while the remaining half has gone for aid to the unemployed. Flynn states:

> "In the last two and a half years, since July 1, 1933, under the Roosevelt budgets emergency expenditures have amounted to roughly $9,600,000,000. But if the government had limited itself to relief and work expenditures to aid the unemployed, it would have spent only about half that much.

"The lending practices of the government should have come to an end long ago." Flynn adds, referring particularly to the RFC loans. "The continuance of loans to railroads and other private groups to carry on private business is indefensible, particularly when the loans are made, as many have been, to brace up crumbling capital structures."

And yet the very beneficiaries of these big handouts are bitterly condeming the New Deal Who was it wrote the song about not biting the hand that's feeding you?

Inflation---Who Wins and Who Loses

By Maynard C. Krueger

It is no accident in American history that the Greenback movement and the free silver movement came out of the West. Both were inflation movements. The capital with which the West was developed came largely from the financial centers in the East. The West was a debtor When prices were low, money was scarce and debts were hard to pay. When prices were rising debts were easier to pay.

The man who borrowed $1 000 in 1913 and repaid it in 1920 was repaying less than half as much purchasing power as he had borrowed. If he borrowed $1,000 in 1920, however, and had to pay it back in 1925 he was paying back almost twice as much purchasing power as he had borrowed.

Debtors and Creditors

The effect on creditors is exactly the opposite of the effect on debtors. The person who loans money when prices are low and gets it back when prices are high is getting back dollars which are worth less than those which he loaned.

To the debtor, then, a dollar which increases in value because prices fall is a dishonest dollar. To the creditor a dollar which decreases in value because prices rise is a dishonest dollar. Debtors can therefore be expected to favor inflation and creditors can be expected to oppose it.

The owner of a mortgage, a bond a bank deposit, or an insurance policy is a creditor. When inflation drives down the value of the dollar these credits will still bring the same number of dollars, but each dollar will buy less groceries than before.

High Prices; More Profits

Ordinarily stockholders gain by a rise in prices. The stockholders own the corporation. But the corporation usually has bonds outstanding, and inflation makes it easier to pay the interest on these bonds and repay them when they are due. The stockholder is the debtor of the bondholder

When prices rise, they usually rise faster than costs of production and thus leave a greater profit for the business, whether it be owned by stockholders or by an individual. Some of the items making up the cost of production also rise rapidly as, for instance the cost of raw materials. But such items as wages, taxes and interest on borrowed capital increase either not at all, or considerably less rapidly than the selling price of the finished product. During the period of rising prices business profits boom and a larger proportion of the national income goes to business men. The prices of some commodities of course rise more rapidly than others, so during a period of rising prices profits are very uneven.

How Wages Affects Wages

If the entire population of the country could be divided into debtors and creditors, the problem would be simple. But most people are neither. In order to have the privilege of being a debtor, one usually has to own property to offer as security. The vast majority of the workers of this country don't own enough to be debtors. Many don't own enough to pay their funeral expenses.

Thousands of workers during the days of "prosperity" followed the advice of the Chamber of Commerce and bought a home with a mortgage plastered on it. They became debtors. They are now no longer debtors. The ceremony which relieved them of their debtor role is called foreclosure.

The capitalist system has created a class of millions of people whose income is entirely from their labor It has cut their wages repeatedly during the period of deflation, and it has cut the wages of millions to zero by refusing them work and throwing them on relief.

Now that wages have been cut to the bone during the period of deflation it is proposed that they should be raised by inflation. It is true that wage rates will increase as prices increase, but there is one thing that has been true of wage rates in every country in which there has been inflation. That is, that when prices go up they go up the elevator while wages climb the stairs.

Real Wages

Immediately following the war there were a great many workers who thought they were getting better pay than they did before the war. It was true that wages had increased, but in many cases they had increased less than the cost of living had increased. When the cost of living rises more rapidly than wages, the actual purchasing power of the worker decreases. Any worker, who in 1920, was not getting about two and a half times as much as in 1913 was in reality getting less.

Organized Workers in Better Position

When prices were increasing so rapidly in Germany in 1923 it often happened that a week's wages would hardly buy a package of cigarettes. This was not because wages had not increased, but because prices had increased so much more rapidly than wages. In the organized trades it is of course possible to get more rapid wage increases than in unorganized trades but there has never yet been a case in which wages kept up with the cost of living when there was very much inflation.

The hardest hit of all wage earners are, of course, people like policemen ,post-office employees, and teachers, or any others whose salaries are fixed on a long term basis and are not changed quickly as the cost of living rises.

INFLATION AND THE FARMER

Farmers Union Washington News

After recessing to attend the agricultural conference held in Chicago and Salt Lake City, this committee will reconvene in Washington on March 23rd.

The Farm Bill was hurriedly drawn following the invalidation of the A. A. A. It is so open both as to what might be done under the law and the great latitude for administration which is passed on to the Secretary of Agriculture, that a battleship could be drawn through it. Time alone will determine what value may be found in this bill and such value will largely be determined by the farmers' patience to lend acceptance to it during a reasonable period of trial. Obviously, farmers engaged in producing the important crops which have historically been yielding surpluses, will receive substantially less cash benefit in the form of payments from the government than those received under the invalidated A. A. A. programs. It will be strictly on the basis of payments per acre for taking acres out of intensive crop production and putting them into soil conservation crops. A very much reduced payment per acre will be paid to farmers for maintaining soil preservation crops in their customary farm-practices. The Department here is filled with worry and wonderment.

It is expected that on Monday the Senate will vote on the amendment to the Packers and Stockyards Act—which the Farmers Union has militantly sought for two years. Indications are that this will pass the Senate. The three important bills to which the Legislative Committee will be giving its most earnest attention are as follows:

1. Commodity Exchange Bill, regarding which you have been advised heretofore.
2. New Tax Bill which is to yield the income to pay for the new farm bill and the soldiers' bonus. One of the things in this bill which will receive our earnest attention will be to impose proper excise taxes on imported fats, oils and grain, some of which now come in duty free. The purpose will be to yield revenue to the Government and protect the farmers' home market.
3. The new relief appropriation bill. We will have equal interest in this because of our interest in the money to be turned over to the Resettlement Administration This is the one humane program here of interest to hard pressed farmers. You will be hearing much more about the Resettlement Administration from this committee from now on. This is the department of the Government which made the large and liberal loan to the Farmers Union new poultry and egg project now being established in North Dakota and Montana. If farmers are interested in receiving fair, human consideration—both from a temporary stand point and as a fundamental correction for the long pull, sympathetic support of this important department should be conveyed to the senators and representatives at once. The more money appropriated for the Resettlement Administration, the more help can be made available to destitute farmers for "rehabilitation".

In other words, it will offer a better opportunity for such farmers to re-establish themselves in better homes under better conditions.

Apart from the pending legislation which has been referred to, the committee has much work to do within the various departments of the Government, to attempt to effectuate improved administration on the part of the federal government.

Promise of New Economic Order Is Seen In Co-Ops.

London— The international Co-operative Alliance representing 100,000,000 members of cooperatives in 40 countries has issued a "Declaration of the Significance of Cooperative Economy" in which it sets forth the principles and aims of the world-wide cooperative movement.

The statement of the federation issued on the 40th year of the organization of the alliance, points to the "era of world wide economic depression and abundant evidence of political and constitutional ferment, the outcome of which cannot yet be foreseen."

Asks Co-op Freedom

In the face of social and economic change the association demands for the national cooperative movements of each country "complete freedom to develop on equal terms with every other economic enterprise" and "a special place appropriate to their distinctive economic characteristics and where they will have reasonable opportunity of self determination within the frame-work of any system or planned economy that may be set up."

The International Cooperative Alliance reaffirmed its political and religious neutrality and restated the following essential principles of the cooperative movement: (1) Open and voluntary membership without limitation of color, race or creed; (2) democratic control providing one member one vote regardless of the amount of shares in his cooperative; and (3) dividend on purchase which eliminates individual profit-making by distributing surplus savings to the members on the basis of their purchases.

New Economic Order

The declaration pointed to the international development of cooperatives as creating "a league of peoples which demonstrates in its practice the efficacy of a new economic order, capable of replacing the existing individual profit-making system; of restoring the world to an equilibrium in economic matters which can be maintained by its principles of association; and when applied universally of furnishing the surest guarantee of world peace."

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

Child Murders

Some think that Hauptmann was innocent, others think he was guilty. He was convicted of killing one baby.

Last year approximately 251,000 babies died in the United States through lack of proper medical attention. Their parents could not afford to take their children to a clinic, and none were provided free for them.

The government, in 1936, is spending $8 for every man, woman and child on instruments of warfare—ingenious implements for killing and maiming people; while its appropriation for safeguarding the public health is 2 cents per person.

The capitalist system is hereby indicted for the murder of 251,000 babies, and the punishment is death. Let public indignation rise in its wrath to sweep the system into the ashcan and erect a sane one in its place, that will not spend billions for more military defense while the people suffer from malnutrition and all sorts of preventable diseases.

Remember—the common everyday horrors of capitalism are never mentioned in the capitalist newspapers.

Build the National Farmer-Labor Party!

One of the arguments against launching a National Farmer-Labor Party in 1936 is that it will split the vote and likely elect a Republican administration that will be blacker that the present one. On the other hand, experience has shown that there is little to hope for from either of the major political parties; they are both capitalist-controlled and all their moves aim at saving the profit system.

A beginning should heve been made before; but since it was not, now is the time to do it. The black night of fascism threatens to swoop down on us and find us unprepared. To withstand it we need a strong united front of all progressives and radicals, in a national Farmer-Labor Party.

There is everything to gain, and nothing to lose, by backing such a party at this time

Mob Murders

Since accurate count was begun fifty years ago, over five thousand murders were pulled off by mobs within the United States, and no-one knows how many unreported lynchings took place.

The year 1892 holds an all-time record of 255 lynchings, while 1932 had the all-time low with only ten. Doubtless people were so depressed about that time that even a lynching did not interest them. Last year there were nineteen lynchings.

Since 1900 less than one per cent of lynchings have been followed by conviction of the lynchers. It appears that in such cases the only guilty man was the one who was hanged or burned.

Such a feeling is but natural in a country where justice so often miscarries and known murderers go free to kill and kill again. Of course it is wrong—our system of crime and punishment is all wrong. The only cure for it is to remove the causes—an inequitable system which sometimes drives a man to murder for fifteen cents.

Lately lynching mobs have developed a penchant for burning their victims. A case in point is the Burning of Raymond Gunn, a Negro at Marysville, Mo., early in 1931. He was seized by the mob and marched to the one-room schoolhouse where he had attacked and murdered the teacher; there he was tied to the ridgepole and the building was burned down. This drama was witnessed by several thousand people, who had been notified days before what was going to happen.

The momento industry has grown up with the lynch industry. Pictures of burning babies have sold for as high as 50 cents each; teeth, shin-bones, fingers, and ears of lynch victims have sold for as high as $5 each And beer and lunch stand concessions at lynching picnics have pulled many a village government out of the red.

THE BONUS AGAIN!—

A group of students at Princeton University recently formed an organization known as "The Veterans of Future Wars'. They demand payment in advance of a bonus for service in the next war, and point to the recently enacted Bonus Bill as a precedent.

And the co-eds, not to be outdone, have launched a sister-organization—'The Home Fire Division'. They style themselves 'The Future Gold Star Mothers of America' and demand immediate status as such, with free trips to Europe, pensions, and other such trifles thrown in.

It is all intended, of course, as a derisive gesture at the veterans, by reason of the bonus.

—O—

But, let's see now!

It is something like 19 years since the young men of the land, between the ages of 21 and 31, registered for the draft. And, as we remember it, those so registered were placed in different classes, depending on availability for service.

For example, those who claimed and were allowed exemption by reason of family responsibilities were placed in Class 5.

—O—

It would be rather interesting to know what percentage of the members of 'The Veterans of Future Wars' are sons of Class 5 men.

The young Princeton men of today would have been about of the age in 1917 and 1918 to serve as the squalling, diapered shields behind which their discreet fathers crawled in order to avoid the draft.

—O—

In a generous spirit of helpfulness, this column suggests that the young Princeton men adopt, as an appropriate device on their family escutcheons, the three-cornered pants, which thus, indirectly served their sires so well during the World War.

And, gallant and chivalrous as they are known to be, the Princetonians will not object if the 'Home Fire Division' use the same heraldic device—assuming that the immediate military traditions of the two sets of families are somewhat the same.

—O—

One should not be too critical, of course. For it is taken for granted that the paters (Princetonian for 'father') of the collegians doubtless had good reasons for their — er — prudence. . .

There may have been, firstly, an understandable reluctance to expose their precious hides, needlessly, to Bosche bullets.

Or, they may have felt themselves obliged to give first thought to their brilliant offspring, which were destined, some day, to enter Princeton. Admittedly this in itself may have loomed as a major obligation. . .

Thirdly, it may have been the cooties. . .

And lastly, they may have neglected to take their spinach regularly. Phonetically, at least, there seems to be a vague sort of connection between 'spine' and 'spinach'.

—O—

While this may hint at the possibility that the young fathers were in a few cases, more discreet than valorous, it must not be understood that they are thought to have been lacking in patriotism! . . . Perish the thought! . .

They marched in parades, waving little flags; they made eloquent four-minute speeches, exhorting all and sundry to do their utmost; they were invariably the first to spring to their feet when the flag neared; they sang 'The Star Spangled Banner' more loudly than anybody else; they kept a frowning and vigilant eye on their less fortunate single brethern, that none might try to evade military service; they were usually present in force at 'Yellow Paint Parties'; they were prompt to compel this or that one, suspected of lukewarmness, to kiss the flag.

And in the nationwide chant—"Nothing'll be too good for you boys when you come back!"—their voices rose the loudest.

They were enabled to go about these patriotic chores, tranquilly and without serious hazard by reason of a bayonet-bristling wall made up of some 4 million other men in Army O. D. who stood as protection between the enemy and the future Princetonians. . .

In trouncing the kaiser's cohorts some of the 4 million carelessly got themselves shot. Which was regrettable, of course; but, after all, what were they paid 30 dollars per month for anyway!

—O—

All in all, this column wholeheartedly endorses both movements—'Veterans of Future Wars' and 'Home Fire Division'. Nay, more . . . it is even ready to recommend that the ante be doubled! . . .

To those frugal souls who may be alarmed by this apparent extravagence, however, let the hint be whispered that no serious fears need be entertained that the U. S. Treasury will be unduly depleted thereby. . .

For this commentator personally promises that he will strive with might and main to have payment of this bonus limited to those who actually don uniform and fight. .

Thus, then, to judge by the probable family history of most of the young gentlemen—and ladies—there would seem to be little cause for apprehension that the Treasury will suffer anything more than a negligible amount of strain.

REPTILES FAVORED BY UNPREJUDICED

No group of animals is more disliked than the reptiles. Prejudice and the fabulous tales told about them have contributed toward making them feared and decidedly unpopular. Yet the person who casts aside these feelings long enough to become really acquainted with reptiles is pleasantly surprised to find them highly interesting and for the most part harmless, says a bulletin from the Zoological Society of Philadelphia.

Despite the general antipathy toward snakes and their relatives, the reptile house is one of the most popular buildings in the Zoological garden. Visitors linger longer and manifest a keener interest in the reptiles than in any other group of animals, with the possible exception of the monkeys.

Persons are beginning to realize, says the bulletin, that reptiles are of considerable importance to man. Some of them are of much value as food, while others are highly useful in the destruction of insects and rats and mice, which form their natural rations.

Zing!

A golfer, no matter how badly he played, was never heard to swear. One day one of his opponents remarked upon this fact.

"Yeh, it's true I don't cuss," admitted the fozzler, "but let me tell you this: Every time I miss, I spit. And wherever I spit, the grass don't grow again no more."

Individualism

"Of course, you like money," said the interviewer.

"Of course," replied Senator Sorghum. "I'm still struggling to save a little fortune for myself."

"And then what?"

"Then I'll wonder what's going to become of it."

PEAS
PEAS
PEAS

Have Their Secrets

WHAT do you know about canned peas, beyond the fact that everyone uses them and they are mighty good? Do you know that both wrinkled and smooth skinned varieties come in cans? Do you know that peas are packed by sizes and that these sizes are numbered from 1 to 6, number 1 being the smallest? And do you know that the smallest size is the most expensive because fewer of them are canned and it costs more to can them, and not because their flavor is superior?

As a matter of fact, many housewives think that the larger sizes (3, 4 or 5) taste better, and some canners pack a flavorful blend of these three sizes called "run of the pod." You must take into account, too, the grades—Fancy, Extra Standard and Standard—in buying canned peas. The Standard grade is the one best adapted to such dishes as soups and purées.

Rich in Vitamins

Canned peas are rich in vitamins A and B, and their vitamin C content is higher than that in certain fruits. There are also valuable mineral salts—in the brine as well as in the peas—and this brine should never be thrown away but saved to use in soups and other made dishes And don't forget that canned peas are a grand ingredient to use in vegetable salads. Here's a simple one in which they taste simply delicious:

Pea, Celery and Onion Salad: Combine the contents of an 11-ounce can peas and one cup diced celery, and marinate in one-fourth cup French dressing for about an hour in the ice-box. Add one-half cup sliced onion, arrange on crisp lettuce and serve. Serves six.*

WEALTH

Wealth is wholly physical, consisting of land, buildings and goods. The prosperity of a nation is measured, not by the amount of wealth it possesses, but by the rate at which it produces new wealth. The accumulated wealth of the country would keep us alive only a few months if production should cease.

Wealth is produced by a combination of three factors: land, labor and capital. Land furnishes the raw materials, which are extracted and fashioned by labor, which uses for that purpose capital in the form of tools, machinery and factories. Whether our future course is destined to be capitalism, socialism, or some other ism, still we must use these three things to produce our wealth. There is no magic formula for producing it in some easier way.

A bank does not itself produce wealth, but it supplies a part of the capital necessary to its production. This capital comes partly from the bank's stockholders but mostly from its depositors. Every depositor in a bank is a capitalist and contributes in some degree to the production of wealth.

When you are asked to accept some new, brightly-colored scheme for solving our economic ills, apply to it the following simple test: will it produce new wealth more rapidly than the existing order? If not, you may be sure that it solves nothing. All too often it will be found that such schemes actually retard the production of wealth.

SOCIETY ITEMS

FOR MRS. M. R. LEVORSON

On April 4, Mrs. M. R. Levorson was honor guest at a birthday party at the G. L. Biddick home. The following guests were present: Messrs and Mmes. M. R. Levorson, G. L. Biddick, Leonard Hanson, Carl Hovie, Otto Melander, C. A. Bloomquist, Mrs. A. M. Aase, Mrs. Yvonne Rossen and George Garver. The evening was spent playing cards after which a delicious lunch was served. Mrs. Levorson was presented with a lovely gift.

Campaign to Save Pedestrians' Lives To Be Considered

An intensified campaign to save pedestrian lives was recommended today by A. V. Rohweder, chairman of the Minnesota Public Safety committee, in the committee's annual report.

The report was released as plans were completed for the annual dinner of the committee in the Hotel Lowry, St. Paul, April 14 when plaques will be awarded to cities and counties named winners of the 1935 Minnesota traffic safety contest.

Rohweder's report also was marked by:

A recommendation that safety educational programs be continued and intensified; criticism of communities that curtail expenses by shutting off street lights; greater safety educational activity in the more sparsely settled districts; criticism of courts which suspend traffic fines because of "some trivial excuse" the adoption of the standard drivers' license law in Minnesota, and greater public support of enforcement agencies.

The report which included an analysis of the fatal accidents showed that, whereas, the fatalities were reduced 49 from 641 in 1934 to 592 in 1935, the percentage of pedestrian death was greater last year. In 1934 the percentage of pedestrian fatalities was 39 2, while last year, it was 40.2.

"Emphasis should be laid on the responsibilities of both pedestrian and motorist and strict enforcement of city ordinances requiring pedestrians to obey traffic signs," Rohweder said. "Pedestrians should be required to cross at intersections, even in residential districts. In the rural districts, county police officials and members of the state highway patrol should warn pedestrians to walk against traffic when using highways."

Referring to the practice of shutting off street lights, Rohweder said "surely some other form of saving money can be found than at the cost of human lives.'

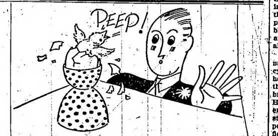
Pointing out that the reduction in the state's traffic fatalities was obtained in spite of an increase in automobile travel Rohweder said: "It is my conviction that the educational program must be credited with being the major factor in this saving of life.

"Lives were saved because the public consciousness was awakened by one of the most intensive public safety campaigns ever carried out in the country. Tragedy was averted because both young and old were taught the benefits of sensible driving, because the message of safety was carried into home and school and because a united campaign was continued through the year with vigor and enthusiasm."

Exercise of slightly more caution and a desire to be courteous on the highway probably would have saved many lives in 1935, Rohweder pointed out. "Altho 432 drivers of the 693 involved in fatal accidents were said to be driving legally, it is apparent that some fault in management of the vehicle was present," he said.

"The 'in-a-hurry' motorist was involved in 13 per cent of the accidents. Driving on the wrong side of the road contributed to the next largest number. If "caution" and "courtesy" are observed, there would be no driving on the wrong side of the road and the 'in-a-hurry' motorist would not be in such a hurry."

The principal speakers at the award dinner, to which representatives of all city and county public safety committees have been invited, will be Dr. G. H. Watson of New York City, president of the National Safety Council, and Gov. Olson, who has donated the plaques. Col. F. W. Matson, president of the Minnesota Safety Council will preside, Sidney J. Williams public safety director for the Council, and W. H. Cameron managing director will attend. Plaques will be awarded St. Paul, Duluth, Austin, Brainerd, Fergus Falls, and Owatonna and the counties of Cottonwood, Rice and Big Stone.



Even EASTER EGGS SHOULD BE MODERN

EASTER dates from the dawn of Christianity, but the chief symbol which is connected with it in these modern times should be as modern as the time — at least within a day or two. The Easter egg is a symbol of reviving life, but, even at that, we don't want it chirping at us if we chip it—that is if we aspire to eat it!

There are so many ways to cook eggs that there has been a centuries-old debate as to which is the best. Even the poets have participated in this argument. In the Seventeenth Century John Dryden wrote:

> "And new-laid eggs which Baucis' busy care > Turn'd by a gentle fire and roasted rare."

And Alexander Pope also preferred his eggs roasted if we are to believe the line in his Epistles of Horace in which he says:

> "The vulgar boil, the learned roast, an egg."

Take Your Choice

You can take your choice as to whether to brand yourself vulgar or learned by the way you prefer your eggs. We won't take sides. But, as far as we can discover, no poet has ever mentioned an omelet (perhaps because there is no rhyme for it, though there's a reason) so we can safely tell about them without getting involved in the controversy.

There are two basic ways of making an omelet — the French way in which the eggs are beaten slightly, just enough to mix the [illegible] yellow and white, and the other way in which the yolks are beaten until thick and lemon colored and the whites are beaten until stiff and then folded into the yolks to make a puffy omelet.

But all sorts of foods can be included in these two kinds of omelets. They can be made with cheese, fish, fruits, macaroni, meats, jelly and vegetables, and this by no means exhausts their possibilities. We have not space to give recipes for all these kinds, but we can at least include a couple of

Vegetable Omelets

Tomato Omelet: Chop one small onion and half a green pepper fine and sauté in one tablespoon butter till tender but not brown. Add one cup canned tomato sauce, one-half teaspoon sugar, salt and pepper, if necessary, and three tablespoons chopped ripe olives. Heat to boiling and pour over either a French or a puffy omelet before folding.

Corn Omelet: Make a puffy omelet of six eggs, six tablespoons hot water, three-fourths teaspoon salt and one-third teaspoon pepper. Add one cup of canned corn and pour into a buttered, hot skillet or better, into two smaller ones. Cook slowly until brown on the bottom, then place in a moderate—350 degree—oven until firm and the top dried off. Fold over and turn out onto a hot platter, garnish with bacon strips and serve at once. Serves six liber- [illegible]

Let Our Motto Be

GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

IF WE HAD BEEN SICK CENTURIES AGO

In primitive times, the chances are that if we had really had something serious the matter with us, we should have been left to die by the whole tribe. For they believed that the sick were possessed by an evil spirit, and the only way they could ward off the evil spirit from themselves was to keep away from the one possessed.

Herodotus, the Greek historian, whom every one still regards as a most accurate observer and recorder of what he saw, reported that in Persia: "The citizen who has leprosy or the white sickness may not come into a town or consort with other Persians. They say that he is so afflicted because he has sinned in some way against the sun."

But things weren't so much better in Europe or the other countries in western Europe. Doctors did their best, according to the knowledge they had. But one must remember that our knowledge of anaesthesias and germs and antiseptics and disinfectants have all come since 1846 when ether was first used.

Before the days of ether, the operating rooms were filled with the groans and shrieks of the unfortunate victims. Often the noise and suffering were so great that students would faint.

The only way patients could forget their pain was in sleep—if they could sleep. Shakespeare says in Cymbeline: "He that sleep feels not the toothache."

Speaking of toothache, it was the barbers who generally extracted teeth. And in Shakespeare's day the barbers had a custom of having musical instruments in their shop windows—maybe it's from that custom that we derive the term "barber shop chords," and then they would tie the teeth they had drawn to the end of the lute strings. But one of the most famous physicians in medical history, Avicenna, whose Canon was a text book in medical schools as late as the Fifteenth century, "loosened teeth by means of the fat of tree toads in preference to pulling them."

The barbers were the surgeons just about everywhere. Indeed the surgeon was an apprentice to the barber shops. In England in 1540, a union of barber surgeons known as the Company of Barbers and Surgeons was founded. A practicing surgeon didn't begin to have the social standing of a physician proper. His business was to do blood-letting and to open abscesses and to dress wounds. He wasn't allowed to prescribe medicine.

In Holland the barber surgeons used to remove glands or sebaceous cysts from various portions of the head and neck. "He has a stone in the head," meaning "he is crack-brained" was a common saying in Holland in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries. So "cutting the stones from one's head" was supposed to be curative for mental deficiency.

People everywhere believed in charms. In many places people dared not be bled without consulting the stars. Those who couldn't afford astrologers consulted almanacs printed for that purpose.

But there were some queer remedies in this country, too. In Governor Winthrop's day, a well-known woman healer had two favorite recipes for curing jaundice. In one she put lemon, tumeric and saffron; the other consisted of 20 head lice mixed with nutmeg and sugar and powder of tumeric. And many believed that jaundice could be cured by the patient looking at yellow objects.

Hydrophobia was one of the great scourges of the Eighteenth and early Nineteenth centuries. Here is a remedy which the legislature of the state of New York bought from a Mr. Croua for the sum of $1,000. It consisted of an ounce of the jaw bone of a dog, burned and pulverized or pounded to a fine dust; the false tongue of a newly foaled colt which was dried and pulverized, and finally one scruple of verdegris, which was raised on the surface of old copper after lying in old earth, the copper of George I and George II being the purest and best. These ingredients were mixed together, and an adult was given a teaspoonful of it daily.

Still the physicians of these bygone times were no fools. They had a lot of knowledge of human nature.

For instance George Cheyne, English physician born in 1671, said: "Too great nicety and exactness about every minute circumstance that may impair one's health is to die for fear of dying." That holds true to this day.

His wife had been away for a week and he had been looking after himself.

"How did you manage, you poor darling?" she asked on her return.

"I lived like a fighting-cock!" boasted her husband. "Bacon and tomatoes for breakfast. Steak or chop in the evenings. Oh, I've become an expert cook."

"But, dear, why bacon and tomatoes? You know you've always liked bacon and eggs."

Be Modern

THE modern housewife measures the ingredients of all her recipes, and that's one secret of why modern cooking is so good. It doesn't take her long to do this because much of her measuring has been done for her in the cans and packages in which she buys her foods. Take cans, for instance. With the following table (which it would be an excellent plan to clip out and keep) she can not only do her shopping intelligently but measure her ingredients in a moment.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

By ROBERT AMES BENNETT

Copyright by Robert Ames Bennett WNU SERVICE

Garth said: "We are talking about Huxby. I've radioed for a Northwest policeman to meet me at Simpson with a plane. The charges are robbery and assault to murder."

"Radioed? The skipper told me his transmitter was out of order."

"By my request, sir. I thought it as well to keep you out of the affair. It is possible Miss Ramill may have recovered from her resentment against him. I'll ask you to pardon my going to see if there are any more reports on Huxby's movements."

Though by no means curt, the dismissal was abrupt. Mr. Ramill stood pondering for several moments before he returned to the cabin and went to the door of the stateroom that the Fort Norman missionary's wife had shared with Lilith.

Some time before the steamer nosed in to the landing, Garth made out that the pontooned plane afloat at the waterfront was too small to be one of the regular Bellanca transports. It had no cabin, and only three seats. Foremost of the passengers ashore, he at once climbed the bluff to the post.

As he expected, a red-coated constable of the Northwest police was lounging in the old trading post storeroom with one of the Airway pilots. The latter sprang to meet him.

"Hullo, 'Lan—you d—n lame duck! Helluva note, you squattering in the wet. Could've cruised your frozen hell a hundred times in any old crate."

Garth gripped hands with him. "'Lo, Kiwi! I didn't happen to be after airpockets. There are things you have to rub your nose against to see."

Garth sobered to business. "What news?"

"Your man set his bus down here three days ago. Hopped off PDQ, with all she could heave up under—gas and oil."

The constable had stood at attention. He met Garth's glance with a salute. "All right, sir."

"Good work, Dillon. One question—those three miners?"

"Broke prospectors, sir. Records, far as known, not savory. But none of the bunch is wanted, and they're not newcomers from across the border. They'll know enough not to interfere when I take my prisoner."

The post factor came hastening in to shake hands. "Pardon my absence, Mr. Garth. Was up to Liard. It's a great pleasure to have you stop off with us. If you plan to take in dogs, I have a picked team that I'd be honored—"

"Thank you, no," Garth cut in. "But I would like a rifle, rabbit undersuit, winter moccasins, gloves, and three pairs of webs."

He went into a bunkroom to put on the rabbit-fur suit under his buckskins. When he came out, a girl in a plain, ill-fitting gown stood talking to the pilot. The pilot glanced towards him. The girl turned quickly. He found himself face to face with Lilith Ramill.

Yet it was not the grease-and-pitch marked face of his canoe companion. Nor was it that deep-lined rouged and powdered face with scarlet-smeared lips that had sneered at him on Tobin's wharf. It was a face smooth and firm, vivid with life and vitality. Only the blue eyes were hard.

"Alan Garth," she said, "I've learned all about it. You're going back there—after him!"

"Sorry, Miss Ramill. It's not revenge, if that's what you think. I tried to spare you. But, if you must have it, he is a thief."

The girl's eyes flashed. "Worse! He's a cowardly murderer. That is why I too am going to see him taken prisoner."

"You?"

"Yes. I am going to see him cringe, the sneaky beast! Do you think I've forgotten how he crept up and shot you when you weren't looking? And what if he didn't intend to shoot Dad? He left him to die. If that's not enough, must I tell you how he taunted me?"

"Yet that's no reason why you—"

"It is! If you refuse I'll tag after you in another plane."

Garth studied her gravely. She stared back at him, hotly defiant. He pretended to accept her reasons for wanting to go:

"You most certainly are a good hater, Miss Ramill. One thing, though. The valley is about to freeze up. It will not be the summer paradise we left. We may land in a blizzard."

She looked around the store. "Where are those Eskimo suits you told me about?"

At that he smiled a bit grimly. "This is Indian country. You shall have rabbit and buckskins." He turned to the factor: "Add the lady's outfit to my account." To the pilot: "Kiwi, this is where you are to fit your name. You're going to be a wingless ground bird."

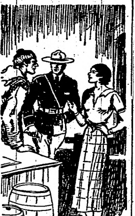
"Oh, have a heart, 'Lan!"

"Three is a crowd, and she is it. Ask her father."

For the first time the girl betrayed a trace of doubt. "But we'll have to have a pilot."

Kiwi stared, then grinned at the joke. "Lady, what you don't know about our boy friend would appear to be quite a considerable.—All right, you lame duck, go hog the joystick."

Constable Dillon put in a word: "It's not on the cards, sir, to take along a young lady. If this Huxby tries to act up—"



"It's Not on the Cards, Sir, to Take a Young Lady."

"He's your meat, Dillon. I'll stand responsible for Miss Ramill."

Down at the waterfront, Garth went over the plane with his pilot friend. There was a full load of gasoline and a change of oil. To the week's supply of provisions, he added the three pairs of snowshoes and the new rifle. With the rifle came enough cartridges to refill the belt that still held his knife and belt-ax.

Lilith had gone aboard the steamer. She returned with her father. He looked worried. She had put on her Indian-woman costume—buckskins, moccasins, fur cap and gloves. The millionaire chose to lay the blame on Garth.

"Have you gone insane? No more than get her out of that muskeg hell, and you want to drag her back to your infernal hole in desolation!"

"The lady's choice, not mine."

"Well, you're taking her."

"How can I help it, sir? You are her father. Why not assert your paternal authority?"

Lilith brushed aside their trifling. "Which is my seat?"

"The rear.—Close her in, Kiwi."

She turned to fling her arms around her father and kiss him. It was the only caress Garth had ever seen her give anyone.

As he put on his pilot friend's helmet and goggles, the constable mounted to the middle cockpit. Kiwi handed the girl into the rear one. He drew over her head the shatterless glass cowl that almost covered the opening.

Garth spoke a last word to her anxious father: "In all probability, sir, we'll overtake you within three or four days. May, however, have to lay over, in case of storm. If fog or snow makes us miss you on your way out, we'll probably meet at Fort McMurray."

Mr. Ramill came close. "Garth, there's something I can't understand. This crazy notion of Lilith's. I mean. It's not mere willfulness. She has something in mind."

"Wants to see the handcuffs slipped on Huxby," Garth replied. "Can you blame her? Mangled vanity. Had believed he loved her for herself at least as much as for her inheritance. 'Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned'—all that, you know."

"Not all, Garth—no! There's something else. I can't make her out. Something different about her."

"Perhaps she'll tell you when we come out. I'll of course do what I can for her."

Garth shook hands, and swung aboard the small craft. At a sign from him, the displaced pilot gave the propeller a spin. The plane swung around, to taxi downstream.

There was no hurry. Had Huxby schemed to fly into the valley merely to stake the placer in his own name and hop out again, he would not have taken the three miners. He undoubtedly had planned to do his season's assessment work.

Midway of the down river flight, the three-seater ran into a sleet squall. Garth dropped to the water and tied up under the lee of a spruce-black point.

They ran in and out of a sleet squall, leaving everything sheeted with ice. Garth and Dillon knocked clear the edge of the wings. Another hop brought the party to the emergency refueling post, shortly before sundown.

This time Lilith Ramill did not refuse Tobin's crude hospitality. She troubled the old sourdough far more by insisting upon watching his preparation of supper and breakfast.

He could not at first believe she was the painted lady who had scoffed at his "garbage." She not only refrained from scoffing, she ate his bacon and porridge as heartily as Garth and the policeman.

The moosehide canoe lay upturned on the bank beside Garth's old birchbark. Tobin had at once told Huxby's story. According to the engineer, the lady and her father were still marooned in the mountains. He had come out with Garth to fetch a plane for them. But Garth had been killed by a wounded she-grizzly.

CHAPTER IX

Murder.

IN THE morning Garth for the first time showed haste. The dawn was far too beautifully rose. He made sure that Lilith's blankets were back in her cockpit before he handed her aboard. He fitted the glass wind cowl to the cockpit rim, which came up almost level with her eyes.

"If we strike into a blizzard, get your cap over your ears, and blanket yourself, head and all," he warned. "You don't want to lose your ears and nose."

The constable was already snug under his own cowl. Garth swung his pilot cockpit. Old Tobin gave the propeller a spin for him.

This time Garth needed no circling in order to trace the air route. Aboard the cabin monoplane he had watched Huxby's instruments and noted the landmarks from above. He now knew the way in by air.

By the time the lovely rose dawn glared into an angry red sunrise, the roaring plane had flown all the way across that weary desolation of muskegs and broken-ridged lower mountains.

Thickening clouds foretold another storm. But Garth had outraced it. Instead of swing in around the out-thrust mountain to the pass, he banked and drove past the east side of the mountain, on a long upslant.

A few miles north from the pass, he banked to the west and headed for the lowest notch in the jagged east-side wall of the valley. Above the great barrier the plane bumped like a boat in a choppy seat.

Garth paid no conscious heed to the rough passage. His hands and feet adjusted the controls with automatic precision, leaving his attention free to center upon what lay ahead.

His first glimpse into the valley showed him a column of smoke above the black belt of spruce at the far end of the lake. Much thicker and darker than ordinary campfire smoke, it stood out distinct against the vivid white of the snow-sheeted tundra slope.

As the plane drove clear above the saddle between the peaks, he shoved the stick forward and cut the gun. With the roar of the engine stilled, the plane swooped down at the lake like a monstrous bird of prey. Relatively speaking, it was driving at its quarry as noiselessly as a great horned owl of the North stoops to strike a rabbit. Also, by entering the valley over this distant saddle, instead of through the pass, Garth felt sure the plane would not be seen.

His next problem was to effect a landing without the roar of the restarted motor. He had already made out Huxby's big cabin plane, moored at the mouth of the glacier stream. That was the only safe mooring place.

Absence of any smoke near the plane told that the miners were camped at the placer. The stream mouth was too far from the diggings for the hurried workers to tramp back and forth every night and morning. Besides, there would be snowdrifts to wade through.

From every indication, the claim-jumper could be surprised and taken before he realized that any other party than his own had come to the valley. The one need was to avoid using the plane's engine. Its roar would be heard for miles.

Garth calculated the volplane angle with his utmost skill. If he hit the water too soon, the propeller would have to be used to pull the plane in for the landing; if he held on too long, there might be a crack-up.

It was a matter of fractions of seconds. He allowed for the fact that the slight wind was abeam, instead of sucking down from the glacier. His one failure was to notice in time the shrunken volume of the glacier stream.

The plane took to the water smoothly, at almost the exact distance offshore that he had planned. The difficulty was that the outswirling current lacked the force he expected. Instead of slowing down or stopping short, the three-seater drove in hard at the cabin plane.

The stream mouth lacked width enough for the small plane to squeeze past the large one. Nor was there room to maneuver between the offshore rocks. Garth acted with instant decision. He swerved the three-seater to clear the tail of the cabin plane. As he stripped off his goggles and swung down from his cockpit with the mooring line, the pontoon stems smashed like eggshells on a water-worn rock, across the narrow channel from the tail of the other plane.

Public Ownership and Co-operative News Notes from Far and Near

A. F. OF L. CHIEFTAIN PRAISES SUCCESS OF CO-OPS IN EUROPE

Washington. — William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, declared editorially in the March issue of the American Federationist that while union-sponsored consumers' cooperatives had been more highly successful in Europe than in America they offer "better goods, services and prices" by eliminating what now constitutes the profits of business.

"Retail cooperatives become increasingly effective as the cooperative principle is carried back to the wholesaler and then to the producer," declared the Federationist.

"Labor unions of this country have tried repeatedly," says the editorial, "to develop various cooperative undertakings—both producers and consumers—with very small degree of success. On the other hand, in Great Britain, Ireland, Denmark, Sweden, Russia, Belgium, consumers' cooperative undertakings have been generally successful. The Rochdale principle and methods have been tested by experience and are regarded as safe guides.

"Cooperatives are not an automatic method of solving problems. They require management, devotion and time, for accounts must balance in cooperatives as in any other enterprise. Those who want to spend their incomes effectively will find co-operatives a help, provided they are looking for a cooperative way of living. Under cooperatives the interest on capital is limited, no financial group or wealthy individual is permitted a controlling interest. The objective is to give to consumers in the form of better goods, services and prices, that which now constitutes the profits of business."

Turghai Proso
MILLET

This Millet was raised in Pennington County by C. M. Evenson and Henry Oen. The Seed was purchased from the Faribault Seed House to be 99 per cent purity and actual germination 90 per cent and raised in Minnesota. There are many kinds of Millet or Proso but the Turghai Proso, the seed house claims, will outyield other millets by a considerable margin. It was first introduced in 1930 and recommended by the Farmers Seed House of Faribault. See what the Farmers Seed House says:

TURGHAI PROSO—Turghai Millet grows three feet tall and has a purple spreading head. The stems bear a wide leaf similar to corn and are not woody. This variety introduced in 1930 has been found to be especially adapted to the Northwest as it will withstand considerable drought. It is a red seeded variety, very much in appearance like the early Fortune Seed. Government reports show that Turghai has yielded from 50 to 70 bus. on heavy soil and three tons of hay per acre. The State Experiment Station in preliminary tests of this variety, finds it out-yielding other Proso Millets by a considerable margin.

Solem Returns---

Europe, Mr. Solem says, the average working man never thinks in terms of motor cars. England's unemployment is at this time less than two million which compared with that in the United States is a small figure.

All these countries are far advanced along co-operative lines Mr. Solem says, Sweden being apparently farther along than the others Sweden has a virile co-operative leadership composed of young people who go out and get things done. Norway, too, is progressing rapidly along this line of efforts. Denmark seems to be lagging behind the other Scandinavian countries in co-operation, and Mr. Solem believes it is possibly due to older leadership that has been in the movement since its inception 50 years ago and haven't the vision and initiative possessed in the other countries.

Mr. Solem who is a native of New Solum township, Marshall county, was editor of the Forum in the first six months of 1933 and left here to take a position with the National Re-employment Service with which he now holds the position of assistant to Dreng Bjornaraa, state director for Minnesota.

Mr. Solem will address the civic and commerce association at its noonday luncheon in the civic and commerce room at the auditorium today.

County Beard—

it wishes Mr. Hoyme stated, and it is not necessary for the county to make any direct appropriation in order to qualify.

The board appointed L. G. Larson as county relief agent to administer the state aid and also to handle the distribution of federal surplus commodities at a salary of $75 per month. Bond was fixed at $1000.

Three short roads were designated county aid roads by the board on Wednesday, namely; from TH 1, north to the Marshall county line in Reiner township one mile west of the Beltrami county line, a distance of 3½ miles. Two and a half miles in River Falls township, from SA 1, south on the west side of Hazel. From TH 32 a mile north of St. Hilaire and west one mile and again from this road north on the west side of the Great Northern railway tracks, three miles.

The county board will resume the old age pension assistance hearings on Monday, April 13.

Forum Meeting—

The stockholders will be served a plate lunch at the Palm Garden Cafe after the meeting.

The organization of the Forum Publishing company started during the summer of 1935 and articles of incorporation were filed with the secretary of state in September. The organization board of directors whose terms expire at this time were: Otto Rehm, president; J. W. Stewart, first vice president; Nels Fore, second vice president; H. Halland, secretary; Carl Swanson, treasurer, and Arvid Wikstrom, J. V. Hoffman, Carl R. Anderson, and Arthur Tanem directors. The organization was legally perfected on February 8, 1936, and the new association purchased the Thief River Falls Forum, changing its name to the Tri-County Forum on the 11th of February. Sale of stock has been continuing with good success in spite of the weather conditions and blocked roads this winter. The list of stockholders number almost two hundred at the present time. A stock sale drive will be conducted thruout the summer in an effort to bring the number of stockholders up to 500.

The meeting on Monday will elect a full board of directors, there being three to be elected for a term of three years; three to be elected for two years and three to be elected for one year. At future annual meetings there will be three directors elected for terms of three years.

shown in the waterworks department for the year 1935. The payment of $10,000 in bonds was included in the disbursements of the waterworks department for the year.

At the end of 1935, the bonded indebtedness of the city was shown to be $291,000. Receipts for the year totalled $269,126, including proceeds of a $60,000 bond issued for the Diesel engine, and another issue of $15,000 for the enclosed skating rink project.

The report revealed that most of the different city funds were in better condition at the close of 1935 than at the end of 1934. Overdrafts in the poor fund, Auditorium fund, park fund, and paving improvement funds had been materially reduced during the year.

Expenditures from the permanent improvement fund during the past year were as follows: Auditorium, $1,463.25; Land condemnation, $7,085; Fire station addition, $4,272; Relief cabins, $1,327.56; enclosed skating rink, $1,665.36

Interspersed between the various matches were tumbling acts which included such gymnastic feats as head and hand springs, the elephant walk, triple dives, lock steps, and head stands, and cartwheels.

The program was a decidedly different type of entertainment and was well received by the spectators who were present. Outstanding ability on the part of the performers was displayed both in the boxing and wrestling matches as well as in the tumbling acts.

Higher Lake Levels Forecast by Olson

A substantial rise in Minnesota lake levels as a result of heavy snowfall was predicted last week by Walter Olson, director of the division of drainage and waters.

"If we have normal rainfall this spring and summer, there will be a considerable increase in ground waters and a consequent rise in lake levels," Olson stated.

"Flood conditions in Minnesota were very materially eased by the fact that there was a dry fall in the southwestern part of the state where the snowfall was the heaviest and that during the spring break-up there were no rains, nor any periods of warm weather of sufficient length to cause the melting of all the snow."

Highway Workers Will Be Placed Thru NRS

All workmen who are to be employed on highway construction this coming season in Kittson, Mahnomen, Marshall, Norman, Pennington, Polk, Red Lake and Roseau Counties will be placed through the offices of the National Reemployment Service offices at Thief River Falls and Crookston.

Through the offices of the Minnesota Department of Highways and the Bureau of Public Roads, the NRS Office receives notices of lettings and awards of contracts, the location and nature of the work to be performed and the number and classes of workers required to do the work as well as the approximate date of the starting of the jobs.

Persons skilled in road and bridge construction are asked to contact the offices as soon as possible as work will start on these projects about the first of May on one of the largest road programs Minnesota has yet put forth.

High Winds Keep Fire Department on the Jump

The high winds on Monday was responsible for five chimney fires which kept the fire department busy answering calls at regular intervals all day.

A fire originated in a pair of rubbers in the basement at the Lonson home on Conley avenue on Tuesday and the department received another summons. Except for the smell and smoke, no damage was done.

Forum Starts New Year This Week

With this issue the Forum starts a new year, having filled the fourth volume with number 52 issued last week.

During the four years since the paper was launched it has grown from a four page six column hand set weekly to a modern equipped, machine set, seven column paper, carrying a minimum of eight pages and has become known as one of the leading progressive newspapers in the northwest.

The paper was launched on April 6th 1932 by H. L. Schuster, Ernest Johnson and R. M. Aalbu on an initial investment of two hundred dollars. The total capital investment up to the time the paper and plant was purchased by the recently formed co-operative association was $850 on which the plant was built and a circulation of three thousand, the largest in the northwestern part of the state, acquired.

The present management contemplates further expansion and hopes to build the paper up to be the largest weekly in the state, to adequately serve the large and constantly expanding trade territory served by the city of Thief River Falls

Middle River Has Radio Broadcasting Station

Middle River (FNS)—This village now has a local broadcasting station, an experiment by Gene Sjoberg of that village, in setting up a small sending apparatus in a work room at his home having been successfully carried out.

The apparatus conveys sound clearly to homes in the village, and also to farm homes in the vicinity. The station is procured on the short wave length. At this time the mechanism is not sufficiently powerful to enable the operator to talk to other towns, but Gene Sjoberg believes that with additional power he can reach cities as far away as Minneapolis.

Mr. Sjoberg is a graduate of Dunwoody Institute, Minneapolis, where he specialized in the study of radio, and has had some experience in repairing radios.

Borderline Cases To Get Preference

Special attention will be given to supplying farm labor and placing "borderline" cases on jobs, Dreng Bjornaraa, state NRS administrator and Victor Christgau, WPA director announced jointly following their conference at WPA headquarters in St. Paul this week.

Mr. Bjornaraa said farmers and other employers needing help should communicate with local NRS offices, or if no employment office is being operated in their county, they should state their needs to county agents who have been delegated to represent NRS in the matter.

Because WPA jobs have been restricted to employment of persons from the relief rolls, many of the so-called borderline cases have continued without jobs, Mr. Christgau stated. "Mr. Bjornaraa and I have agreed that borderline cases registering with the NRS office should be given preference in farm jobs available," Mr. Christgau said.

Europe, Mr. Solem says, the average working man never thinks in terms of motor cars. England's unemployment is at this time less than two million which compared with that in the United States is a small figure.

All these countries are far advanced along co-operative lines Mr. Solem says, Sweden being apparently farther along than the others. Sweden has a virile co-operative leadership composed of young people who go out and get things done. Norway, too, is progressing rapidly along this line of efforts. Denmark seems to be lagging behind the other Scandinavian countries in co-operation, and Mr. Solem believes it is possibly due to older leadership that has been in the movement since its inception 50 years ago and haven't the vision and initiative possessed in the other countries.

Mr. Solem who is a native of New Solum township, Marshall county, was editor of the Forum in the first six months of 1933 and left here to take a position with the National Re-employment Service with which he now holds the position of assistant to Dreng Bjornaraa, state director for Minnesota.

Mr. Solem will address the civic and commerce association at its noonday luncheon in the civic and commerce room at the auditorium today.

County Board—

it wishes, Mr. Hoyme stated, and it is not necessary for the county to make any direct appropriation in order to qualify.

The board appointed L. G. Larson as county relief agent to administer the state aid and also to handle the distribution of federal surplus commodities at a salary of $75 per month. Bond was fixed at $1000.

Three short roads were designated county aid roads by the board on Wednesday, namely: from TH 1, north to the Marshall county line in Reiner township one mile west of the Beltrami county line, a distance of 3½ miles. Two and a half miles in River Falls township, from SA 1, south on the west side of Hazel. From TH 32 a mile north of St. Hilaire and west one mile and again from this road north on the west side of the Great Northern railway tracks, three miles.

The county board will resume the old age pension assistance hearings on Monday, April 13.

Forum Meeting—

The stockholders will be served a plate lunch at the Palm Garden Cafe after the meeting.

The organization of the Forum Publishing company started during the summer of 1935 and articles of incorporation were filed with the secretary of state in September. The organization board of directors whose terms expire at this time were: Otto Rehm, president; J. W. Stewart, first vice president; Nels Fore, second vice president; H. Halland, secretary; Carl Swanson, treasurer, and Arvid Wikstrom, J. V Hoffman, Carl R. Anderson, and Arthur Tanem directors. The organization was legally perfected on February 8, 1936, and the new association purchased the Thief River Falls Forum, changing its name to the Tri-County Forum on the 11th of February. Sale of stock has been continuing with good success in spite of the weather conditions and blocked roads this winter. The list of stockholders number almost two hundred at the present time. A stock sale drive will be conducted thruout the summer in an effort to bring the number of stockholders up to 500.

The meeting on Monday will elect a full board of directors, there being three to be elected for a term of three years; three to be elected for two years and three to be elected for one year. At future annual meetings there will be three directors elected for terms of three years.

Higher Lake Levels Forecast by Olson

A substantial rise in Minnesota lake levels as a result of heavy snowfall was predicted last week by Walter Olson, director of the division of drainage and waters.

"If we have normal rainfall this spring and summer, there will be a considerable increase in ground waters and a consequent rise in lake levels," Olson stated.

"Flood conditions in Minnesota were very materially eased by the fact that there was a dry fall in the southwestern part of the state where the snowfall was the heaviest and that during the spring break-up there were no rains nor any periods of warm weather of sufficient length to cause the melting of all the snow."

Highway Workers Will Be Placed Thru NRS

High Winds Keep Fire Department on the Jump

The high winds on Monday was responsible for five chimney fires which kept the fire department busy answering calls at regular intervals all day.

A fire originated in a pair of rubbers in the basement at the Lonson home on Conley avenue on Tuesday and the department received another summons. Except for the smell and smoke, no damage was done.

Forum Starts New Year This Week

With this issue the Forum starts a new year, having filled the fourth volume with number 52 issued last week.

During the four years since the paper was launched it has grown from a four page six column hand set weekly to a modern equipped, machine set, seven column paper, carrying a minimum of eight pages and has become known as one of the leading progressive newspapers in the northwest.

The paper was launched on April 6th, 1932 by H. L. Schuster, Ernest Johnson and R. M. Aalbu on an initial investment of two hundred dollars. The total capital investment up to the time the paper and plant was purchased by the recently formed co-operative association was $850 on which the plant was built and a circulation of three thousand, the largest in the northwestern part of the state, acquired.

The present management contemplates further expansion and hopes to build the paper up to be the largest weekly in the state, to adequately serve the large and constantly expanding trade territory served by the city of Thief River Falls.

Middle River Has Radio Broadcasting Station

Middle River (FNS)—This village now has a local broadcasting station, an experiment by Gene Sjoberg of that village, in setting up a small sending apparatus in a work room at his home having been successfully carried out.

The apparatus conveys sound clearly to homes in the village, and also to farm homes in the vicinity. The station is procured on the short wave length. At this time the mechanism is not sufficiently powerful to enable the operator to talk to other towns, but Gene Sjoberg believes that with additional power he can reach cities as far away as Minneapolis.

Mr. Sjoberg is a graduate of Dunwoody Institute, Minneapolis, where he specialized in the study of radio, and has had some experience in repairing radios.

Borderline Cases To Get Preference

Special attention will be given to supplying farm labor and placing "borderline" cases on jobs, Dreng Bjornaraa, state NRS administrator and Victor Christgau, WPA director, announced jointly following their conference at WPA headquarters in St. Paul this week.

Mr. Bjornaraa said farmers and other employers needing help should communicate with local NRS offices, or if no employment office is being operated in their county, they should state their needs to county agents who have been delegated to represent NRS in the matter.

Because WPA jobs have been restricted to employment of persons from the relief rolls, many of the so-called borderline cases have continued without jobs, Mr. Christgau stated. "Mr. Bjornaraa and I have agreed that borderline cases registering with the NRS office should be given preference in farm jobs available," Mr. Christgau said.

IMPASSABLE ROADS CUTS ATTENDANCE

Highly Successful Meeting Is Held at the Odd Fellows Hall

Impassable roads kept many Forum stockholders from the eastern end of the territory from attending the annual meeting held at the I. O. O. F. hall in this city on Monday afternoon, cutting down the attendance considerably. Thirty-seven stockholders were in attendance, however.

A resume of the stock sales was given by the secretary H. Halland and a talk on the building of the paper and its future possibilities was given by R. M. Aalbu, editor. The business manager, Mr. John Niemi, gave a short outline of the present business trend. Fred C. Proehl, formerly of this city gave an address wherein he related some of the labors that have attended the building of the paper as he observed it while in this city and commending the stockholders for their support of the paper. He urged that they should all get solidly behind the venture and make it the largest and best weekly in the state. The co-operative association form of organization, he said, assures that the paper will always be in control of the rank and file of the people and will serve their interests and fight their battles. He cited instances where the newspapers published and edited for the purpose of profits for private owners will garble, distort or ignore vital news that the people should have in order to intelligently discuss and direct their governmental affairs, and commended the editor upon having ed-

MUDSLINGER IS PUT ON SPOT AT MEETING OF WPL

Frank Ohlquist, Erstwhile Townley Supporter Fails to Prove His Statements

Frank Ohlquist renegade farmer-laborite from Badger, Minnesota, appearing by invitation of James Burrell, spoke to the workmen's protective league at its meeting on Monday evening.

Mr. Ohlquist, who was identified with A. C. Townley as secretary of the committee of 100 two years ago, when Townley attempted to defeat R. T. Buckler for the congressional nomination, and later when Townley filed for governor in a dirt campaign to defeat Olson, repeated the same old charges and ranting which were indulged in by Townley and later by Walter Liggett in the Mid-West American, notorious scandal sheet of Minneapolis. He intimated that Floyd B. Olson was connected with the Liggett murderers

When he was placed on the spot by questioners after his talk, it developed that his "facts" consisted of his own statements without proof of any kind. Asked who was paying him for his tour of vilification he stated that he was traveling on his own money, but admitted that he had succeeded in borrowing $5 to get out of St. Paul after the farmer-labor convention two weeks ago.

After some discussion that matter, of replacing several seats on the central committee was left to the next meeting at which time the central committee will make nominations for the positions for approval by the rank and file.

Red River Valley Water Control Costs Will Not be Excessive, Meeting is Told

Water control in the Red River valley of the north will not cost an excessive sum and will not be such a difficult engineering problem as preliminary surveys indicated, W. W Horner of St. Louis, consulting engineer of the national resources committee, told members of the Red River flood control and water utilization committee in St. Paul Monday.

"We have determined, through consulting the representatives of the entire area that water control is not going to cost an excessive sum, and that it is not nearly so tough a problem as had been anticipated," Horner said.

Could Build Low Cost Dams

"The secret lies in the Ottertail and Red Lake basins, with Lake Traverse as a possible third. Inexpensive dams can be placed there, which would control the water levels both in the lakes and in the Red River, and afford water at all times, yet capable of being controlled from the flood standpoint.

"Of course, this entire subject must be approached from the standpoint of doing the most important things first, and thus planning an entire project to be executed in its entirety over a period of years."

Prominent in the discussion of the plans, in addition to Horner, was E. V. Willard, Minnesota conservation commissioner.

The committee as a whole will make a tour of the district involved beginning May 18 it was decided. The tour will start at Breckenridge on that date and after visiting the Ottertail district will end for the day at Crookston. The next day the tour will include the Red Lake basin and end for the day at Grand Forks, May 20 the tour will end at Fargo.

June 8 the committees of North and South Dakota and Minnesota will meet in St. Paul to formulate the final recommendations concerning the entire water problem.

Representation in the convention is on the basis of one delegate for each 100 votes cast for Governor Floyd B. Olson in the general election of 1934. Pennington county has 28 delegates; Red Lake county 11 delegates and Clearwater county 26 delegates.

FROZEN WATER MAINS CAUSE DEPT. TROUBLE

Spring Breakup Discloses Several Mains Have Been Bursted By Hard Frost

Signs of the breakup after a hard winter have been making themselves known to the employees of the city water department with frozen water mains in various parts of the city thawing out and starting unwelcome geysers.

The department was called into action early Monday morning when a major break in the large main on LaBree avenue at 5th street caused a leak that challenged the pumps at the pumping station. The water was leaking out faster than the pumps could pump it up into the tank. The main was shut off and a crew of men went to work. They had the break repaired by seven o'clock that evening when another break in a dead end on Main avenue across the street from the Northern Chevrolet Co. began spouting water up thru the pavement. Strenuous work until seven a. m. the next morning stopped this leak. Mains on the east side of the river are also reported to be froze and more trouble is expected before the frost is all out. The frozen mains are eight feet under the surface.

4-H Club Leaders Lay Plans for 1936

Plans for the year's 4-H program were discussed at a meeting of the 4-H club leaders of Pennington county held Monday evening in the county agent's office in the municipal auditorium. Fifteen club leaders were present.

Mr. H. A. Pflughoeft of Crookston, district club leader, was present and addressed the group, talking on a new safety project. Mr. Grow, assistant county agent talked on a new project which is being launched for the girls of the 4-H clubs. The project deals with meal planning and home furnishing.

One-act plays, to be given by the various clubs at the city auditorium in a program similar to the one presented last year, were selected and discussed. Work on the preparation of these plays for presentation by the different clubs will begin soon. No definite date for presentation has as yet been set. Dates for club meetings were set by some of the leaders.

Taxpayers Meeting Is Postponed Until June

Only five members appeared at the meeting of the Pennington County Taxpayers league to be held at the civic and commerce room in the city auditorium Tuesday afternoon. After some discussion it was decided that another meeting will be called for the early part of June.

Buick Car Stolen Monday Night; Is Recovered

A Buick sedan belonging to W L. Carlisle manager of the Thief River Grocery was stolen from Mr. Carlisle's garage at 503 Knight avenue north on Monday evening but was found on Wednesday morning near the east city limits mired down in a mudhole, where the thief or thieves had abandoned it. No damage to the car had resulted, it was reported, the culprits apparently having gotten but a short way before miring down and deciding to leave it.

The chief of police suggests that it may be a good policy to lock the garage at night, something which Mr. Carlisle had not done.

SERA BILLS ARE AIRED AT TUES. COUNCIL MEET

City Spent Less Than $125 on River Projects, Mayor States

APPLICATION SET CITY SHARE $1170

Skating Rink Heating Plant Will Over-Run Estimate by $2315.00

The SERA spent around $8,000 of federal funds on the Red Lake river dredging project two years ago and will not put in any more funds to meet the outstanding bills to local business houses, Mayor W. W. Prichard disclosed in reporting to the council the results of the interview with Mrs Anna Dickie Oleson to the council Tuesday evening. The city which was the sponsor of the project has spent less than $125 on the project it was stated. He also stated that application for the project on file with the SERA and properly signed by the city officials places the city's share of the expenditures to not over $1170.

The controversy has been smoldering for two years following the refusal of the city council to honor bills for materials from local hardware and lumber dealers and others for materials delivered to the project on order from Mr. Frisbie SERA engineer in charge of the project.

Aldermen Christofferson and Griebstein claim that Mr. Frisbie placed the estimated expenditure by the city to be not over $160, while Alderman Peter Myhrum, then president of the council states that the application calls for an expenditure of not to exceed $1170 and that it was signed by himself as president and by the city clerk with the full knowledge of the other councilmen.

The city attorney who was also a member of the committee which interviewed Mrs. Oleson on the matter hesitated to express an opinion on the matter and Alder-

HARRY E. BOYLE MEETS WITH CO. ASSESSORS THUR

Explains Recent Changes in Tax Laws and Instructs In Assessing

Assessors of Pennington county met with Harry E. Boyle, state tax commissioner at the city council room in the municipal auditorium this morning and received instructions regarding their work for this year.

Mr Boyle explained the changes in the tax laws made by the last session of the legislature and outlined the application of the homestead act and how the reduced valuation is applied. He went thoroughly into the matter of what constitutes a homestead and whom are entitled to the reduced rate in valuation. He urged them to be very careful in their work and thus save time for the county auditor, the boards of equalization and the tax commission, aiding in levying the taxes as fairly and equitably as possible.

Referring to the money and credits tax, Mr. Boyle told of how the tax commission had forced collection from tax dodger thru investigation and suggested that the assessors should make a thorough inquiry in this field. If for any reason the assessor has reason to believe that the taxpayer is attempting to conceal moneys and credits, the assessor should make what he believes will be a fair arbitrary levy, Mr. Boyle stated, the taxpayers who otherwise fail to make their disclosures will do so quickly if they are over-assessed on their moneys and credits, he stated.

Marshall County Sends $125 to Flood Victims

Approximately $125 has already been contributed for the flood relief aid by Marshall county people during the past week when a campaign was conducted to raise money for that relief, according to W. R. Holbrook, treasurer of the county chapter of the American Red Cross sponsoring this drive. The following amounts were raised in the various sections: Argyle, $15.13; Big Woods, $5.00; Gatzke, $5.00; Holt, $7.80; Oslo, $18.16; Newfolden, $16.20; Strandquist, [illegible] $17.25; Viking, $[illegible] and this city, $31.90.

Conservation Week Announced By Gov. Olson

In a proclamation issued last week Governor Olson designated May 3 to 10 inclusive as "Minnesota Conservation Week" and Friday, May 1, as "Arbor and Bird Day."

The proclamation, in part, follows:

"The return of spring, after one of the coldest winters in Minnesota history, brings new hopes and new courage with which to face the future. The hardships of winter fade into the background and it becomes a little easier to live and work and play. But the spring season should also remind us that the powerful forces of nature have not yielded to the intelligence and industry of mankind. A tremendous amount of planned work remains to be done before it can be said that we in Minnesota have learned to make the most of the many gifts bestowed upon us by nature

"It is essential to the welfare of the state that the conservation and restoration of our natural resources be given an increasingly prominent place in the education of our citizens, so that they will lend their support to the enlightened program of conservation now being carried on by the federal and state government.

"One week of the year has been set aside for the purpose of bringing the work and the problems of conservation more clearly to the attention of all our people. It is to be hoped that during this week the benefits of forestry, game conservation, water control, and the other activities of conservation will be given wide publicity".

GAME DIVISION HOLDS FUR SALE

Fur dealers last week paid nearly $3,000 for more than 1,000 animal pelts taken from game law violators since last fall by the division of game and fish.

The skins are sold to fur dealers upon submission of sealed bids. An unusually brisk demand marked last week's sale, according to Edward Gehrke, in charge of seizures.

Included among the pelts sold were 785 muskrats, 77 beaver, 68 mink, 32 skunk, 46 red foxes, 28 timber wolves and 10 raccoon.

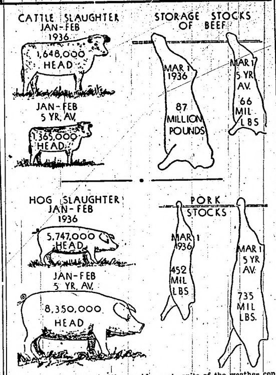
:-: Slaughter Stocks Increase :-:



Indication of why the cattle market has been showing weakness is shown in the large number of cattle that have been slaughtered at federally inspected packing plants of the United States says the Livestock Market Digest published by the Central Co-Operative Association, farmer-owned livestock selling agency at South St. Paul. February slaughter was 741,000 head or the largest for the month since 1918, the record year.

For the first two months this year, cattle slaughter has been heavy in spite of the weather conditions, which have greatly hampered the marketward movement of livestock.

The figures below show comparisons of cattle and hogs slaughtered under federal inspection during the January-February period this year and for the five-year (1931-1935) average of the same period.

On the right, figures show comparisons of beef and pork stocks held in storage houses of the United States as of March 1, 1936 and the five-year average for that date.

Warm Weather Brings Food Poisoning Danger

Doctors warn against leaving food exposed in warm places.

St Paul, Minnesota. For the housewife, the coming of warmer weather means the coming of the season when special precautions are necessary for the protection of food.

Today's bulletin from the Public Health Education Committee of the Minnesota State Medical Association tells about the two common types of food poisoning and advises special care on the part of cooks and housewives to keep perishable foods covered and in cold places.

The most common type of food poisoning comes from bacterial infection. It is likely to happen whenever perishable foods are left exposed to flies and contamination and in warm places.

Under such ideal conditions, the bacteria multiply rapidly and the luckless victim who innocently eats the food becomes host to swarms of germ enemies. Cream puffs and salad mixtures left out in the open air are frequent offenders. The food itself tastes and smells good. The trouble is not food decay but contamination.

Food poisons from the toxins manufactured by such organisms as the botulinus are less common but they are very serious when they do occur. In this case, it is not the organism itself that causes the trouble but the chemical it manufactures. Botulinus poisoning occurs most often as the result of improper canning of vegetables. To destroy botulinus a very tough organism, requires prolonged heat. If it is not killed in the canning procedure, it continues to manufacture poisons in the can. The acids of fruits discourage their growth but vegetables such as beans and corn and peas are especially liable to poisoning and should not be canned at home except under expert instruction.

Most parents are so busy training children to eat regularly that they fail to help them form the habit of liking people. Development of this characteristic will often prevent fussing about food, temper tantrums, lying, disobedience, jealousy and many other bad habits which cannot be easily corrected by direct injunction

CCC Desertions Give Officials Few Happy Days

By Allen D. Fields
Youth News Service

More boys left CCC camps during January than in December or November. The War Department disclosed that 13,754 CCC men left in October, 12,014 in November, and 10,735 in December.

Most of those who left, deserted. To avoid dishonorable discharges which they would receive if they "went over the hill" the youths in the camps ask parents or friends to write them that jobs are waiting. In this way they not only get fare home but avoid unwelcome questioning by relief or welfare investigators who might take "DD's" as an indication of unwillingness to accept employment.

How it is possible for young men who are isolated in distant camps, to obtain jobs that city youth, who are on the spot, cannot get, is not clear. The ex-CCC men invariably explain that the jobs "blew up" when they arrived home.

Figures on desertions from the CCC are not listed in the semi-annual report to the President. Many CCC companies have lost more than half of their original number of enrollees through desertion or "employment", it is claimed in many places close to the organization. It is not unusual for as many as 50 young men to walk out in a body as happened at the camp near Sumatra, Fla. More than 400 enrollees left the Breeze Hill camp near Middletown, N. Y., recently. Desertions usually follow complaints and protests against poor food, unpopular army officers, unsanitary working conditions or unpleasant living quarters.

The CCC was never able to fill its original quota of 600,000. The quota was quietly reduced to 500,000. There were never actually 500,000 enrolled. Official figures are padded by addition of veterans' camps, Indian reservation projects, Alaskan and Puerto Rican projects.

The original age limit—18 to 25—was stretched to include young men between the ages of 17 and 28. The period of enrollment was lenghtened. In many cases, army chaplains and reserve officers were withdrawn from CCC duty because of the smaller number of enrollees.

Captain E. M. Harton, Co. 1686, Peacock, Mich., writing in Happy Days, semi-official "authorized" CCC paper, acknowledged the situation and proposed "that men who have been dishonestly discharged because of desertion should be permitted to re-enroll upon the district commander's approval of an application or with a special hearing."

The large turnover in the Corps and its steadily decreasing personnel was one of the most important reasons for recent government curtailment of the CCC program, it is believed. The government move to cut down the number of camps came as a surprise, since the CCC is the one government plan which has met with little or no criticism from anti-New Deal forces. A bill now in Congress would provide for the enrollment of youths in the CCC whose families are not on the relief rolls.

Ministers' Launch Anti-Hearst Fight

By Paul L. Morris
Youth News Service

New York (YNS) A campaign to acquaint the ministers of this country with the war-mongering of Hearst's newspapers has been started by a group of clergymen in New York City.

Resolutions are to be passed urging all ministers to refuse to lend their names to Hearst's editorial pages. It is claimed by this group that oftentimes the ministers allow their names to be used unwittingly, little realizing that they are linked up with war propaganda sponsored by William Randolph Hearst.

Educators at Teachers College, Columbia University and elsewhere have joined hands with the clergymen in a drastic drive to combat Hearst's fascist influence. Supported by Dr. Charles A. Beard's recent speech before the Department of Superintendence convention in St. Louis, the educators feel that a definite dent can be made in Hearst's hitherto impregnable armor. No longer do the educators duck in fear any time they see a Hearst red-baiting editorial coming their way. They are meeting Hearst without flinching, as was shown by Dr. George S Counts remarks in St. Louis in February, when he called Hearst to task in no mincing terms.

A group of young people at Columbia and New York University have started an alumni association that bids fair to become a dominant factor in American life today. Called the Progressive Intercollegiate Alumni Association of America, with offices at 270 Broadway, it seeks to unite all progressive liberal and radical forces into one organization that will serve as a mouthpiece to the college alumni who today have no voice in the affairs of youth. Heywood Broun, Elmer Rice, John Haynes Holmes George S. Counts, Riehnold Niebhur, have accepted sponsorship of the group.

OLD WORLD FESTIVAL BOOKED FOR ST. PAUL

Opening with a parade led by covered wagons, the great drama of the settlement of Minnesota will be re-enacted at the Festival of Nations to be sponsored by the International Institute, St. Paul, on April 24-26. Taking part in the three-day fete are 2,000 men and women representing thirty nationalities. The entire floor space of the Auditorium Arena, the largest municipal auditorium in the Northwest will be transformed into an old world village market square with life-sized shops and a Gothic cathedral which will serve as a stage and entrance for performers into the market square.

The attractions of the Festival will be threefold. Back of the shops there will be two streets of Homelands Exhibits where many rare and beautiful importations brought from European birthplaces will be displayed. In the colorful shops of the market square foreign foods and souvenirs typical of each nation will be offered for sale. Twice each day the market place will be cleared for a spirited program of songs and dances by men and women representing the nationalities and wearing authentic costumes. No one will take part in the program who does not belong to the nationality depicted. Following the program events, members of the audience will join the performers in dancing in the market square. According to Mrs. M. L. Griffiths, general chairman, and Mrs. Alice L. Sickels, director of the International Institute, every effort will be made to reproduce the spirit of the village fiestas where people of all ages, all classes, and all economic conditions meet in happy friendship.

The Festival will be statewide in scope, according to Mrs Griffiths. Performers are rehearsing in several Minnesota towns and art objects and heirlooms will be sent for the exhibit from nieghboring cities.

Goat's Milk

The following is taken from Bulletin 429 of the New York Agricultural Experiment Station:
Extensive study of the use of goats milk in infant feeding by Dr. Sherman and Lohnes, Buffalo showed, goats milk was supplied to 18 cases of children that were not thriving on any other food that had been tried. In 17 cases a satisfactory state of nutrition was established through the use of goats milk. The beneficial results in some instances being very marked. With certain of these children their situation was regarded as serious, and their restoration to a satisfactory nutritional condition was good evidence that goats milk is often a very desirable resort for infant feeding

GRAND FORKS RALLIES TO DEFEND THE FLAG

Our neighboring city of Grand Forks held an election last week wherein two incumbent members of the city commission were defeated after one of the most bitter campaigns in the history of the city.

The two unseated commissioners had committed the unforgivable sin of supporting a municipally owned light and power plant in a city thoroughly dominated by the power trust and their defeat in an IVA town was not unexpected. Nevertheless, the Grand Forks election should serve to knock some of the optimism out of those who believe that the voters of the nation have now learned their lesson and are ready to discount the bleatings of the Babbitts and vote for a change in the economic order. The average young voter still believes he can become a millionaire; the average family man is still too engrossed in eeking out a living to think about economic issues and those on relief are afraid to call their souls their own for fear they will lose their subsistence pittance. Mankind will stumble along over a long and rocky route yet before it reaches the "New Day".

The mayor of Grand Forks who had been very active in behalf of the anti-municipal ownership candidates made a statement after the election quite characteristic of the sort of Tommyrot that special privilege defenders dish out. Said he: "Sinister influences in our city have been told by Tuesday's ballot, that the government of the United States and the flag representing it are still watchwords in our splendid community."

Brave words those. But it is evident that the shades of Lenin and Trotzky scared the daylights out of the Northern State Power company at that, for Grand Forks is being offered a substantial reduction in light and power rates if it will desist from building a municipal plant.

The winning candidates issued statements assuring the voters that they would pledge themselves to an "honest, businesslike administration," a statement which has a vaguely familiar sound to Thief River Falls voters, no doubt.

All in all, Grand Forks apparently has a wonderful campaign and will profit to the tune of $60,000 per year reduction in electric rates as a result of the work that was done by the two commissioners it cast into outer darkness. Which proves that humanity still crucifies its saviors.

TENANTRY MUST BE HALTED

Word comes from Washington that only one more signature is necessary on the petition relieving the committee of the Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill and forcing it to a vote on the floor of the House of Representatives. This is the closest that the bill has yet come to getting consideration. Congressman Lemke charges that each time the petition comes close to having the required number of signatures, administration leaders have brought pressure to bear on some of the signers to withdraw their names.

The same thing may happen again now, of course, but we are hoping that this time it will come to a vote, not that we are naive enough to believe that it will pass, but because it will definitely classify certain members of congress who are inclined to do the farmers a lot of lip service, but are expected to be found wanting when the major test between the financial pirates and the common people comes.

Passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill would not in itself cure our farm problems. But it would reduce the farmers' average fixed charges and halt the alarming increase in tenantry and foreclosures. A look at the statistics shows the need for drastic action in this direction. For instance:

In the 15 principal wheat growing states more than 108,000 farmers lost their farms thru foreclosures and bankruptcy during the period between 1920 and 1924. Over 122,000 farmers surrendered their property without legal proceedings during the same period. Nor has the trend towards tenantry been headed since, for the department of agriculture reports that in 1926 104,400 farms were foreclosed; in 1928, 105,600 went over the hill and in 1934 an all-time high of 168,000 farm foreclosures were recorded.

It is a quite generally accepted truth that the strength of a nation must repose in its farms and homes. If our people are to be deprived of their homesteads the country will be ripe for Fascism, Communism or any other "ism". It may be that the financial crowd are so secure in their own power to make it Fascism that they are willing to let the climax arrive. But they shouldn't be too sure. If Germany and Russia are comparable examples there may be more people that will choose Communism than Fascism if they are forced to make a choice between the two.

AGAINST WHOM ARE WE ARMING?

April 6th Congressman Ernest Lundeen and Senator George Norris celebrated the 19th anniversary of the declaration of war against Germany by reminding the members of congress that they voted against war.

The declaration of war against Germany came on the heels of a presidential campaign which culminated in the re-election of Woodrow Wilson because "he kept us out of the war." It came also hard on the heels of a preparedness campaign of considerable magnitude. Always when we asked whom should we arm, we were assured that we were not to arm against anyone. We were just to be "prepared to defend ourselves."

Congress has passed the greatest peace-time military appropriation in history. Yet we hear no wails of protest from those who are inclined to hysteria over the unbalancing of the budget, in this instance, altho the dire results to the budget because of the soldiers' bonus and social security legislation has been shouted from the housetops. Just as a matter of record we list here appropriations for social security and social service as compared to army and navy appropriations:

EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1937
(Estimates from the Budget)

Women's Bureau	$ 175,000
Chemical Warfare Service		$ 1,400,000
Maternal & Child Welfare	316,000
Seacost Defenses		1,750,000
Services for crippled children	2,500,000
Forage for Army horses, etc		3,158,900
Maternal & Child Health Service	3,000,000
Reserve Officers' Training Corps		4,008,900
U. S. Employment Service	4,120,000
Organized Reserves		6,500,000
Children's Bureau	7,714,000
National Guard Bureau		34,000,000
Office of Education	4,611,000
Marine Corps		24,970,000
Public Health Service	21,417,000
Army Air Corps		61,250,000
Department of Labor	24,319,000
Replacement of Naval Vessels		230,500,000

Again we are being told that all this is "just to be prepared to defend ourselves". In the light of the experiences of the past, we feel that we have a right to ask, Against whom are we arming?

VETERANS OF FUTURE WARS
(From The New Republic)

Solemn pretensions of patrioteering organizations need ridicule as much as anything. We commend the high spirits of the young men at Princeton who formed the Veterans of Future Wars and asked congress for a thousand dollars apiece as compensation for their future military service. Their sisters who at the same time organized the Future Gold Star Mothers and asked for free trips to Europe to view the future graves of their future sons who will fall in a future war added a touch of grimness to the irony—even though the hurt feelings of the real mothers changed them into a mere Ladies' Auxiliary. But surely the movement ought not to stop here. Why do not the young women start a society of Mothers of the American Revolution, and one of Capitalist Dames, to honor the heroism of their offspring who will once again risk their lives to save the country from its present oppressors? These societies might well send out a list of contemporary Tories (a sort of Black Network) who, in the interest of the patriots of the future, ought to be prevented from speaking before women's clubs and chambers of commerce.

SWEDEN THINKS OF MASSES
(The Nation)

Sweden's new budget is a tribute to both the efficiency and the social-mindedness of its Labor government. Although expenditures will exceed last year's 5.4 per cent there will be a surplus of 20 million kronor, which will be applied to a 12 per cent reduction on income taxes. The reduction in the normal tax will be of benefit primarily to the less well-to-do classes and is vigorously opposed by the large taxpayers, who have been clamoring for the elimination of the surtaxes levied on large incomes during the crisis. These are to be maintained and consolidated into a permanent system with an even sharper incidence of taxation. The increase in expenditures is to be devoted chiefly to social and cultural purposes, such as old-age and invalid pensions, loans to farmers and cottagers, public housing, and scholarships. There is, however, an increase of five million kronor in the appropriation for national defense. Perhaps the most unusual feature in the budget is the plan to amortize the whole of the short term indebtedness incurred during the depression, a large part of which will be paid off by the end of the current budget year.

A SILVER LINING DISCOVERED
(The American Guardian)

"There is a silver lining to this terrible flood disaster", a Roosevelt cabinet member is quoted as saying. "The capital goods industry will be called upon to supply a great volume of machinery and merchandise to replace the loss." . . This is capitalist philosophy in all its baldness. . . One naturally would expect such expressions from the owners of factories that will be called on to supply the losses following the flood—but it just doesn't seem civilized for an officer of a great nation such as the United States boasts it is, to talk about profitable business as a result of death, suffering and disaster such as many sections of the country have endured the past few weeks. . . Perhaps the cabinet officer meant well—he was thinking of another group of sufferers—the unemployed!

PROTECTED BIG BUSINESS
(The Progressive)

A sidelight on how the newspapers protect the big interests:

The Taxpayers' and Electricity Users Committee, a utility organization set up in Milwaukee to bring about the defeat of the referendum on the acquisition of the Milwaukee utility, filed a report several days ago showing that it has spent $18,587 during the campaign.

This is said to be the largest amount ever filed in a Milwaukee political campaign.

Despite this obvious attempt to defeat the acquisition proposal with excessive use of money, the Milwaukee newspapers buried the news about this big expenditure deep on inside pages of their papers.

RAWEST DEAL
(The National Voice)

"The rawest deal of the New Deal was the return of rum," says Clinton N. Howard, "and whether they call it Vodka in Russia, Johnny Walker in Scotland, Pale Ale in Ye Olde Englande, La Vine in France, Firewater by the American Indian, or Bootleg to the respectable (?) American who violated Prohibition, it is all hell water to the genuine Christian, whether it be called Presbyterian Punch, Baptist Booze, Lutheran Liquor, or Methodist Mud-in-the-eye. This filthy business came back, and was not altogether resisted by so-called Christians."

The Washington Commentator

THE HAUPTMANN CASE

It isn't so long since that criminals were executed in public. Usually these affairs drew large crowds. If the records may be believed, there were even those 'fans' who, to assure themselves of a place close to the scaffold, came so early as to necessitate bringing lunch with them.

There they stood—or sat—munching away at their food, the while they watched, with avid absorption, the wretch up above them his tied legs kicking, as the rope slowly choked the life out of him.

* * * *

If it happened that there was a last-minute reprieve, the crowd was howling and indignant because it had been deprived of its entertainment. Old hags danced about, shrieking their disappointment and shaking their fists in the air.

* * * *

This is not merely a glimpse of England in the time of which Charles Dickens wrote. With the addition of such modern touches as the electric chair, and formal printed invitations, it is a picture of what happened recently in New Jersey.

True, there were no crones to scream their fury when the warden, on March 30th, announced a 48-hour postponement. But the complaints were just as vehement, despite the fact that in this more enlightened age, the howls came from the newspapers.

The two sets of objections were however probably inspired by much the same motives.

* * * *

One presumes, of course, that Richard Bruno Hauptmann was guilty.

At least, the jury said so. And one may not fairly say that this particular jury did not take its duties seriously. It deliberated and pondered till it was quite tuckered out. It was, in fact so nearly exhausted when its chore was over that nothing less than a sumptuous banquet at one of Flemington's hotels sufficed to revive its spirits.

And according to reports, it was quite a boisterous and hilarious occasion.

* * * *

Hauptmann got a fair trial. Of this, almost every eastern newspaper will be quick to give assurance. And almost all the rest of the chief actors—except the defense, of course—will agree.

That Judge Trenchard, with the unreasonableness which sometimes follows senility, should have taken a violent dislike to him was merely Bruno's tough luck.

According to report, the learned judge did everything but hit the defendant with the judicial cuspidor.

Perhaps it is that Judge Trenchard doesn't like Germans. And with the excusable absent-mindedness of old age, he may have forgotten that the war ended in 1918.

* * * *

The kidnap ladder was a particularly damning bit of evidence. And the prosecution convinced the jury that it belonged to Hauptmann

He had, it appeared, almost torn down his own house in order to get together the necessary materials. Just why didn't he use some of the considerable amount of lumber lying about, no one understands. But perhaps he did it merely to make the mystery more mysterious. Or maybe he did it in order to enable the prosecution to match the boards that much more easily. In this respect, he was probably one of the most helpful criminals they had ever prosecuted.

* * * *

And Kohler the wood expert, identified the lumber very readily. But he would probably have identified anything else that Willentz might have requested. A most obliging chap, this Kohler!

He even named the State in which the tree had grown. One suspects that if it had been necessary, he would have stated, with equal emphasis, that the lumberjack who cut it down was cross-eyed and chewed tobacco.

But of course it isn't every day that one is expert witness in a world famous trial! Have to lay it on a bit, what!

* * * *

Hauptmann was duly represented by counsel—eminent counsel, in fact—the fat and somewhat dull Lawyer Reilly, of New York.

In his own particular puddle, Reilly was reputed to be a considerable sized frog But he was no match for Attorney General Willentz, the sharp and clever Jew.

Most famous New York lawyers seem to have achieved their reputations largely through their ability as 'fixers'. But perhaps at Flemington, as may have happened in other small, backward towns, he was denied an opportunity to put this talent into play.

Or he may not have been quite himself—worrying over his domestic affairs, for instance. One learns from recent newspapers that his ex-wife is at this moment, suing him for increased alimony.

Anyway, the prosecution got into evidence everything it wanted, including the laundry bill.

* * * *

Wads of the kidnap money have turned up, here and there, about the land, none of it traceable to Hauptmann; and there are other angles which seem to give the lie to the verdict of 'guilty'.

The governor of New Jersey tried desperately to save the condemned man from the chair. But his lone voice was quite drowned out in the mob's shrilling for Hauptmann's life.

He insists that the investigation be continued so the real truth may be learned. But frantic efforts are being made to choke it off, and the strident cry of 'politics' is raised against the governor.

* * * *

As a matter of fact, it may as well be dropped. If it turns out that Hauptmann was innocent, it will do him little good; for he is dead: while judge, prosecutor, witnesses and jury will probably merely shrug indifferent shoulders.

* * * *

Nor is it likely it will teach the effete East anything. It believes firmly in the efficacy of capital punishment as a crime deterrent.

It is quite too stupid to take a lesson from the enlightened Mid-West. . . Milwaukee, for example, without capital punishment and with a homicide rate of less than 2 per 100 000 population, as against Washington, with capital punishment, and with a homicide rate of over 22 per 100,000. (1934 figures.)

The Mid-West states of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota have long since advanced sufficiently far to abandon the barbarism of human slaughter houses; while the East remains only a day or two removed from the hanging of poor, old harmless women as witches.

* * * *

And yet they speak of their neighbors to the west as 'The sons of wild jackasses!'

How very amusing they would seem to themselves if, with their other backwardness, they didn't also completely lack a sense of humor.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

By Ben C. Hagglund

Civilization Arrives

The other day scores of Ethiopians discovered what Civilization was, when Italian invaders loosed a barrage of incendiary bombs and gas which left in its wake fire, destruction, and horrible death.

The Japanese are busily civilizing the backward Chinese in the same manner. They have already invaded the Mongolian People's Republic (a socialist state) and have sacked a couple of its principle cities.

But the announcement is nothing to the actual civilization. Wait until the Italian and Japanese capitalists can safely exploit the subdued people, with the blessings of all fascists the world over—bombs and gas would probably be preferable to such servitude.

The Glorious Vision

The latest release of the March of Time newsreel shows glimpses of the New Russia, a big thing that can be ignored no longer. Russia is real and ideal at one and the same time. Despite its shortcomings (which are being ironed out) Socialism in Russia offers Peace and Plenty in a solidified form, not a gaseous state

While stubborn Old Guardists try to shut the vision out, like a child covering its face to ward off fancied danger, American working men, on the other hand, are beginning to wonder if we can't establish something like it over here. A man who loves his country owes it to himself to change it to fit his needs—that is the new patriotism, which is as old as the 1776 kind in the last analysis. The glorious vision persists, which politicians have painted since politics began, that we can all have a more abundant life. Russia is a pioneer in making this dream a reality.

American Empires

Picture a series of empires, each larger than the rest, some of them interlocking all of them strangely competitive to each other, and at the same time co-operating with each other and you have AMERICA.

RULERS OF AMERICA, A Study of Finance Capital, by Anna Rochester, is a stupendous study of the contemporary scene. In this work, Miss Rochester shows the extended ramifications of the Houses of Morgan, Rockefeller, Mellon and the rest; how they gained control of wealth and power that would shame that of many an ancient king; what devices they use to retain the fidelity of the Middle Class, that historic Catspaw for the capitalist class; and why they are in reality the "rulers of America," which is ostensibly a democracy.

Everybody has an idea that the capitalist class is powerful, but HOW powerful it is can never be imagined until you read this book.

"What Is Communism?"

"A commune is a government where there is public or common ownership of all things, including houses, farms, farm products stores, merchandise, office buildings, factories, mines, transportation and communication systems, women and children." . . . "Communists aim to abolish Christian homes and to use women as common property, and for their children to be reared in state institutions instead of homes."

These are extracts from a four-page folder entitled "What Is Communism?" recently issued by —the Ku Klux Klan, Atlanta, Ga.

No doubt the Klan went to great trouble gathering the information contained in this folder. It is said that wherever the Klan operates, radicals and those suspected of being radical are assiduously sought out, questioned (with the idea apparently of gaining knowledge of economics) and induced to give up his valuable information, sometimes by coercion We have heard of these inspiring feasts of knowledge. A radical, says the most enthusiastic Ku Kluxers, yields information more readily by the application of the rope and faggot.

I suggest that the government issue a blank postage stamp, which would symbolize the Klan's contribution to the sum total of human knowledge.

People Oppose Fixed Stratas Prof. Says

Three main generalizations on the relation of the country to the towns and cities of America were made by Dr. Francis D. Farrel of Kansas State College when he addressed more than 1,000 Minnesota schoolmen at the University of Minnesota Monday, April 6. He was one of the speakers of Schoolmen's Week.

"The American people are opposed to fixed stratifications of society", he said. "There must be no insuperable barriers between classes. A program of education that ignores this fact, that seeks, for example, to limit the farm boy to the study of agriculture, is foredoomed, for lack of public support Opportunity for education must not be abridged by occupation or social environment.

"A large part of the talent needed in the cities must be and should be recruited from the countryside. The Cities proverbially are dependent upon the countryside for both physical and spiritual stamina.

"The essential dignity of all useful occupations should be honestly and definitely recognized. The making of good books is no more and no less important than the making of good butter or good bricks.

Dr. Farrell appealed for an appreciation of the less practical values in the materials of education.

"Possibly some changes of emphasis in education would help us to improve our spiritual development" he said. "If we would study chemistry and mathematics and agriculture and music or professional purposes, we should be the better for it. If we would learn to entertain ourselves more with music and poetry and insect collecting and various other hobbies instead of depending quite so much upon the inanities of Hollywood there would be a distinct spiritual gain. An increased devotion to personal integrity and other homely virtues, to simple living and to honest love of home and country would bring us increased spiritual satisfaction."

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

The liquor seller will never be prayed from behind the bar; the brewer will never be preached off his beer keg. So long as a bushel of corn made into meal sells for around sixty-cents, and that bushel made into whiskey retails for ten dollars, and so long as laws permit making and selling liquor; brewers, distillers, and saloon keepers will ply their character curse business.

The liquor drinking places, the brothels are not doing business for any mere fun, they are profit propositions.

Prostitution exists by kidnapping girls for profit and because many girls are denied a decent wage and they are out to get money even if it be by indecent method. Who cares, anyhow?

Take the profit out of liquor as out of war and how much liquor business would there be and when would there be another war?

How many like Judas are selling Christ (who profess to be His follower and attend church) for the profit there's in it?

INFLATION AND THE FARMER

By Maynard C. Krueger

Inflation will reduce the burden of the farmer's indebtedness to the extent to which prices rise. If prices double all the way around, then the farmer who previously paid out a quarter of his income in interest on a mortgage will because of the doubling of his total income have to pay out only an eighth of his income for interest. If inflation runs wild and prices run to ten or fifty times what they were before, the farmer's obligation is practically wiped out. As a debtor, the farmer gains by the reduction in the value of the dollar.

But inflation will not solve the farmer's problem. It is true that inflation will temporarily increase the exports of agricultural products, but this is true only in so far as foreign countries do not protect themselves by raising their tariffs, and it can be true only for a very short time.

Farmers Suffer

The farmer's fundamental problem arises from the fact that the prices of the goods he sells have not kept pace with the prices of the goods he buys. The fact that farmers are often in debt is due primarily to this disparity between their buying and selling prices. When, after the war, agriculture settled down to its more or less permanent state of depression, the prices of the farmer's product fell to somewhat less than they were in 1913, while the prices of machinery, fertilizer, etc. remained 40 per cent higher than they were before the war. The result has been that very few farmers have made a decent living since the depression of 1921.

If farmer's debts are reduced by means of inflation, and if the prices of the farmer's goods still stay lower than the things he buys, his problem is certainly not solved. Inflation will raise both his buying and selling prices and will not eliminate the difference between the two. This means that the farmer would get only a temporary relief from his debts because they would inevitably pile up again

"Relieving" the Farmers

There is one class of farmers and an increasingly large class, which would not get even this temporary relief because they have already been relieved of their debts by the sheriff's hammer. To those who have already lost their farms and their homes, a reduction of the debt burden cannot bring them back.

This does not mean that there is no solution for the farmer's debt problem. One solution which has been proposed is that the interest rate should be cut by Federal legislation. Another is that the working owners of mortgaged farms should be given an opportunity to surrender their titles to a Federal agricultural agency in return for a use-lease which would be paid for only by crop taxes.

Linked With City Problems

No matter what solution is found for the farmer's debt problem, one thing is certain That is that the finding of a solution under the capitalist system will be greatly speeded up if farmers will refuse to pay interest and taxes and use their meager incomes instead to maintain the standard of living of their families.

The market for the farmer's products must be restored by putting people back to work in the cities at wages high enough that they can afford to eat. And the farmer must be protected against exploitation by the International Harvester Co. and its kind. These things can be done only under a socialized system. That is why the interests of the farmer and the interests of the city worker are so closely tied together. Inflation will only muddy the waters.

WHY I DO NOT DRINK

Young people of the Friends Church of Indiana recently took part in an interesting contest, in which they were asked to submit ten reasons "Why I Do Not Drink".

Miss Irene Qualkinbush of Pooli, Ind., won the contest with the following reply:

1. It causes poverty in purse, character and in soul.
2. It brings sorrow to themselves, and the innocent have to suffer also for the guilty.
3. It makes undesirable citizens.
4. Drinking injures the mind, and thinking is impossible.
5. It shortens life.
6. It causes punishment for this wrong doing. "What will a person gain if he loses his soul?"
7. Alcohol lessens speed and skill. It increases errors and accidents.
8. Alcohol reduces the power to withstand extreme cold or heat.
9. Alcohol costs money. The money spent for alcohol better go into books, travel, or education.
10. Beware of the first drink, because alcohol is a habit forming drug.

Honesty in man or boy is generally ingrained. You can't change it.

WILLING TO BARGAIN

"Well, I never," murmured Smith, looking up from his paper. "It says here that a man out West bartered his wife for a cow."

His little wife looked shocked.

"You wouldn't barter me for a cow, would you, Henry darling?" she purred.

He was silent. Then:

"Of course not, Henrietta," he replied. "But I'd hate to have some one tempt me with a good second-hand car."—Answers Magazine.

Not to Be Forwarded

"So far, so good," said the examiner. "Now, then, in case of fatal accident, where do you want your body sent?"

"Whar do I want de wich sent, boss?" inquired the applicant.

"Your body—it would have to be shipped somewhere, you know."

The candidate made answer as he edged toward the door.

"Ef you don't mind, mister," he said, "I'll take it along wid me now."

And he did.

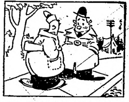
Fooling for a "D"

"I fooled them at school today," announced Johnny.

"How's that?" asked dad.

"They asked me to give Lincoln's Gettysburg address, and I said he never lived there."—Our Paper.

SURE SHOT



"Do you think women would make good soldiers?"

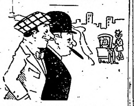
"If they were as persistent in battle as in argument they would be invincible."

Hearty Approval

"Are you resentful toward the banks?"

"Not me," replied Farmer Corntossel. "The banks are what enable the city folks to save up the money they come along and spend for summer board."

MEOW-OW-OW!



"He called his mother-in-law an old cat."

"That took some courage."

"Oh, he didn't do it in words; he sent her a package of catnip."

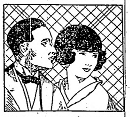
DREAM ON, BOY



"Engaged? Why, he is considerably younger than she is."

"Yes, but he doesn't know it."

READY FOR KISSES

Mr. and Mrs. Jones had been invited to a friend's for tea.

"Come along, dearie," said Mrs. Jones to her three-year-old son, "and have your face washed."

"Don't want to be washed," was the reply.

"But," said mother, "you don't want to be a dirty little boy, do you? I want my little boy to have a nice clean face for the ladies to kiss."

A few minutes later the boy stood watching his father washing.

"Daddy!" he cried. "I know why you're washing!"—Whitley Seaside Chronicle.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

Before the current could float the three-seater back into deep water, Garth leaped ashore. Lilith had opened the cowl of her cockpit and was starting to climb out. Garth glanced at the threatening sky.

"She has settled down hard and fast, Miss Ramill. Better stay snug aboard until we return."

The girl's reply was to scramble forward on the shoreward wing of the plane. Garth waded out in the icy water and had her hand down his rifle, the three pairs of snowshoes, and all the blankets. He tossed everything to Dillon, then took the girl on his shoulders.

The policeman had started upstream with the outfit. He walked across the now shallow ford without getting a drop of water over the tops of his heavily greased shoepacks. Garth slung Lilith on his shoulder like a sack of meal and splashed after Dillon.

At the far bank Dillon stopped to put on a pair of snowshoes. Garth lowered the girl upon a bare rock, and ran down the left bank to swing aboard the cabin plane. With him he took the blankets. When he came ashore, he had on dry socks and moccasins.

He frowned at Lilith. She was flopping awkwardly along on snowshoes behind the policeman.

"Take off those webs and get into the cabin," he ordered.

"I will not," she refused. "I'm going with you. I came to see that beast arrested."

"Don't be a fool. We'll be there and back before you've more than got started. There's no time to wait for you. Blizzard may swoop down any minute."

He had slipped on the third pair of snowshoes. He took his rifle from Dillon and started off as guide. The constable followed at the same rapid gait. He was an experienced snowshoe runner. Lilith tried to imitate their deft swinging stride with the webs. She tripped and plunged face-down into a drift.

Instead of turning back at the girl's cry of appeal, Garth quickened his stride to a run. A severe blizzard would thicken the skim ice and close the water lane out from the stream mouth. That would mean a wait until the stream ran dry with the freeze-up of the glacier.

Above the site of his old camp Garth halted and signed for his companion to listen. Down through the snowy stillness came a clear ring of metal on metal.

"They're drilling below the frostline to blast a shaft," he said. "Richer gravel on bedrock, at the foot of the placer trough."

Dillon forged into the lead. "You'll trail me now, sir."

Without any protest, Garth fell in behind. The Law was now in command. A few strides brought them to the dyke of igneous rock that walled the lower end of the placer trough. From behind a stunted spruce they peered across the treeless width of rock to where a large fire was flaming at the edge of the matted timberline scrub.

Over the fire hung three big iron kettles. Beside it stood a small cradle for rocking gravel. But there was no one working the rocker, nor was there anyone in sight. Even the ring of sledge on drill in the newly dug pit, just beyond the fire, had ceased.

"Not so good," Garth murmured. "I'm not so sure it's a surprise."

"You'll stay here, sir."

"No."

Constable Dillon spoke with cool logic: "If it's a surprise, I need no assistance. If he is warned and prepared to resist, better for you to support me from cover."

"Well—perhaps."

"The only way, sir. You stood responsible for bringing the young lady."

"Very well, Dillon," he agreed. "Wait till I take position."

He shifted to the left side of the stunted spruce and crouched down where he could peer between the lower branches. At the other side, the constable stood up and stepped out into the open. Hardly was he clear of cover when a harsh shout came from the scrub beside the fire:

"Halt! Throw up your hands."

Constable Dillon paused. But he did not put up his hands. The Northwest police do not surrender. Dillon merely swung the barrel of his carbine backward under his arm, and made quiet reply:

"I have here a warrant for the arrest of Vivian Huxby for theft and assault to murder. Any persons who interfere with his arrest will make themselves liable."

"Bah, you cock-capped red jay, you can't bluff me," Huxby gibed. "You're covered. Move, and you get a bullet through you. Drop that gun and shove up your hands."

A sideward jumping down-thrown would have put the constable back in cover. But he was a member of the Northwest Mounted Police. Retreat could no more be considered by him than surrender. Also, he had no authority to shoot his man. The warrant called only for the arrest of the accused. He had to do his duty at whatever risk.

"You will be well advised not to resist," he said.

With that, he raised his right snowshoe and slid it up a low cross-drift in a forward step. As he bent forward to bring up the other web, a rifle roared in the dense shrub.

Garth fired into the faint haze-puff of smokeless powder. Back came a bullet that clipped a branch at his left elbow. He shifted sideways towards the tree trunk, and rose to peer through a higher opening. A slight movement of a spruce spray in the scrub brought his rifle to his shoulder.

Another twitch of that spruce twig. His finger tightened on the trigger—Crash! He hurled down on his right side. The first thought that flashed into his mind was that his rifle had burst. His right arm had gone numb as if broken by the shock.

Luckily, he did not at once try to spring up. As he paused to feel at the numb arm with his left hand, the bark flew from a limb close over his head. The scar of white wood showed that the bullet had been fired from off to his left.

He flattened down and crawled into the snowless hollow alongside the tree trunk. In the hollow lay his rifle. It had not burst. But that was no consolation. The first shot from off to the left had struck square against the side of the breech and smashed the magazine.

One look at the weapon showed that it was ruined. He wormed past it to the far side of the tree trunk. During all the many seconds that had passed since the firing of the first shot, he had heard no call nor any sound whatever from Constable Dillon. He peered out under the low-drooped spruce boughs on that side of the tree.

As he expected, the worst had happened. The policeman lay on his back. He had been shot through the heart. One glance told Garth the fact that his companion was beyond all aid.

He looked for the constable's carbine. It was nowhere in sight. The low drift behind which Dillon had fallen gave Garth enough cover to crawl out beside the body. But the carbine was not under its owner.

Garth pulled the snowshoes from the feet of the dead man. On the heel of one web he perched the constable's cap. He reached out sideways and lifted the cap so that it peered above the top of the drift. The cap flipped back off the snowshoes pierced through by a bullet from the scrub behind the fire.

At the roar of the shot, Garth bobbed up three feet to the left to look for the missing carbine. It lay half buried in the snow, a long ten feet away. When shot, Dillon must have flung out his hands as he pitched over backwards.

Huxby had proved he could shoot a rifle with deadly accuracy, and his men were nearly as expert. To make a dash for the carbine would be equivalent to committing suicide. To lie quiet would give the killers time to realize there was no rifle waiting to meet their attack. The fourth man might already be circling to creep in from the rear.

With his knife Garth slashed out the webs of Dillon's snowshoes. Then, worming his way backwards,

He Swung the Body of the Constable Across His Shoulders.

he started to drag the body downslope. The tree put him under cover from the two killers near the fire. A drift enabled him to crawl to another tree without being seen by the man off to the left.

A sideward shift brought him to the shallow channel of the frozen spring rill. He swung the body of the constable across his shoulders, stepped into his snowshoes, and ran aslant downslope.

Every few seconds that passed without the roar of a rifle behind him, meant a widened margin of safety.

Whatever the cause of their delay, he had gained a long start before more yells told him they had cut his trail. At the outburst, Garth eased off a little on his desperate speed.

His fast mushing had already covered three-fourths of the distance to the stream. It was now a simple matter of running on to increase his handicap over the killers. Only a little time would be needed to cast free the cabin plane. As she drifted out in the current, the cross-wind would swing her around. Then a quick run out the water lane, and the take-off—"

Close ahead, he caught sight of Lilith Ramill. She was sitting on her snowshoes. Her right foot was drawn up on her left knee, and she was rubbing hard at the ankle.

At sight of the limp body on Garth's shoulders, she started up, horrified. "Oh, oh, Alan! Is—is he hurt?"

"Murdered. And you—G—d!—you here, all this way from the plane. Rifle gone. They're coming. Get up—go back."

"Coming!" she cried. "That murderer! He'll kill you, too! Go on, Alan. Hurry. I'll follow."

She turned around on her right foot without a wince or groan and bent to slip her moccasins under the toe thongs of the snowshoes. Deceived into thinking her sprain not serious Garth slued around her and ran on at his best gait. He would get the body of Constable Dillon aboard the plane and mush back for the girl. If she followed even at an ordinary walking pace there might yet be time to get away.

He made the plane in short order and got the dead policeman to the cabin by way of the wing. Leaping off, he rushed back at top speed to meet Lilith. He had to go all the way to where he had left her.

She had slung the snowshoes on her back, floundered through the first drift, and collapsed. When he came up, she was rubbing snow on her bared ankle. She looked up at him, white-faced with pain and despair.

"I tried, Alan. I can't even walk," she said. "Go back. It's all my fault. Hurry and save yourself. Maybe I can—delay him."

For reply, Garth swung her up across his shoulders and headed again for the plane. There still might be time. He put all his strength into another burst of speed.

They came to the glacier stream, with no sight or sound of the pursuers behind them. Garth lifted the girl from his shoulder and set her on the front edge of the monoplane wing. He grasped hold to vault up beside her.

A bullet fanned the girl's pain-whitened cheek. Another bullet struck the wing edge between her and Garth. He jerked her down off the wing. The firing ceased.

After murdering Constable Dillon but before starting to trail Garth, Huxby must have sent one of his men running along the foot of the tundra slope to take possession of the planes. Garth had outrun the miner. But the man had come within easy rifle range and clear view of the plane—at least of its upper parts.

Garth did not hesitate a split second. He carried Lilith to the mooring tree and slashed the line with his knife. Then, taking the girl pickaback, he set off up the stream bank.

His one backward glance showed him that the plane was drifting out into the lake. But, the cross-wind had died down. The lessened stream current could be counted upon to carry the plane out beyond reach before it was stopped by the skim ice.

CO-OPERATIVE NEWS NOTES

In order to purchase three packing plants of Armour & Company at San Jose, Modesto and Visalia Calif., the Tri-Valley Packing Association, a cooperative group of 284 vegetable and fruit growers in the Santa Clara and San Joaquin Valleys, has obtained a commitment of $245,000 from the Berkeley Bank for Cooperatives. The loan, which runs for ten years, enables the association to purchase the facilities for cash and at a discount. The packing plants have been leased by the cooperative since its establishment in 1932.

Cooperative dairy organizations have earned a significant place in the dairy business. Twenty-three hundred cooperatives transacted business of nearly half a billion dollars last year. About half of this business was done by 200 fluid milk associations; the other half by associations manufacturing dairy products. Co-operatives handled 36 percent of the butter and 22 percent of the cheese made in this country in 1934. These figures apply to the country as a whole. In the outstanding dairy states the percentage handled cooperatively is much higher.

At Harrisburg, Pa., a small cooperative club organized in the offices of the State Farm Bureau eight months ago has blossomed out as a full fledged cooperative. With almost a hundred members the cooperative is now handling gasoline and oil, auto insurance, canned goods, cereals and other commodities At the end of the first six months the club declared savings dividends of twelve per cent.

In Egypt there are 676 cooperative societies with a total membership of 64,607. They are nearly all agricultural societies of a general purpose type. There are three large-scale societies for the marketing of fruits and vegetables.

* * *

The Eastern States Farmers Exchange, which last year completed a $300,000 addition to its cooperative feed mill in Buffalo, added 6,000 farmers in eight Atlantic seaboard states to its membership in 1935. The 62,000 farmer-consumer members of the cooperative did a non-profit business of $14,067,533 according to the report of Quentin Reynolds, general manager, to the annual meeting of the Exchange last week. This was an increase of 13.5 per cent over the purchases of the cooperative the previous year.

This week members of the cooperative will receive checks totaling approximately $100,000 as a direct return on savings. An additional fifty thousand dollars was voted to be set aside for further expansion of the co-operative. Savings returns in the 17 years of the activities of the Exchange have totaled well over $2,000,000. The Eastern States Farmers Exchange has extended its service to motor oil, paint, spray materials, binder twine, dairy supplies, flours and cereals and has set up 18 regional warehouses in addition to its headquarters in Springfield.

Sunday, 7:30 p. m. Salvation meeting

We are sure the public will be interested in knowing what is being done in connection with relief for the flooded areas in the eastern territory. We have 30 relief stations in Western Pennsylvania. Over 250,000 people in New England, Pennsylvania, and northeast Ohio have been helped by our workers. In Pittsburg 4,000 WPA workers, employed in cleaning the streets, are being fed by the Salvation Army. 370 tons of food and clothing have been donated to the organization by citizens of Pennsylvania.

To be sure you are helping the Salvation Army please ask anyone wearing a uniform who solicits aid from you, which army they represent. There are two armies working in this territory, the Salvation Army and the Samaritan Army.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Bothun Return After Spending Winter in Sunny Climes

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Bothun returned Thursday night from Phoenix, Arizona, where they spent the past six months vacationing in "The Valley of the Sun". They report that their vacation was an ideal one, with excellent weather and temperatures for traveling. Altogether, they motored about eleven thousand miles, and the entire trip, Mr. Bothun states, was made without suffering even the inconvenience of a flat tire. The only adjustment made on the car during the entire tour was the adjustment made of the carburetor for mountain travel.

Leaving Thief River Falls on October 15, Mr. and Mrs. Bothun traveled through Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, California New Mexico, Arizona, and Old Mexico.

At Phoenix, Mr. and Mrs. Bothun lived in Pickwick Court, a court of bungalows for tourists. The city of Phoenix has a population of 80,000. During the past season, Mr. Bothun states, the Civic and Commerce association of Phoenix has registered forty thousand tourists, of which, it was estimated, twenty per cent were residents of California, itself a great winter resort state. Tourists are members of a visitors club, which goes on sight-seeing excursions two days each week, the excursions being led by experienced guides employed by the club Interesting and historic places visited by the Bothuns while in Arizona include the Grand Canyon, the Case Grande Ruins, the Superstition mountains, Coolidge an dRoosevelt dams. Final Assembly Program May 1

The final assembly program sponsored by the Lincoln student body during the present school year will be held Friday afternoon, May 1, at one o'clock in the municipal auditorium.

Featured on the program will be Geoffrey O'Hara, Canadian-born composer, speaker and raconteur, who will address the students on the subject, "The Fun and Philosophy of Musical Composition."

Political Aspirations Are Low in County; One Files

Local political aspirations are running lower than usual this year, there being only one filing for county office so far made, that being Frank Race for commissioner in the first district.

Only five county offices are to be filled this year, namely: the first, third and fifth commissioners districts in which O. G. Lee, Paul Roy and O. M. Mandt are incumbent respectively. None of these have filed for re-election as yet. The other two offices to be filled are Clerk of Court and Probate Judge. The incumbents, Adolph Ecklund and Andrew Bottelson have not as yet filed.

Filings close on May 25th for county offices and May 6th for state offices. Being twenty days and forty days respectively before the primary election which this year falls on Monday, June 15.

RE-SETTLEMENT PROJECT TO BE LAUNCHED HERE

125 Farms to be Purchased by Federal Government in This Area

MODEL HOMES TO BE BUILT BY WPA

Will Be Sold to Selected Rehabilitation Clients With Farm Experience

A rural resettlement project which may embrace 125 farms is being planned for this territory, it was announced this week by the rural resettlement administration. The project is one of two planned in this state which will include upward of 375 farms. The other project will be located at Litchfield.

Plans are now under way to secure options on good, tillable land preferably without buildings, the report states, and the number of farms that will be bought here will depend largely upon the price at which they can be secured. There is a definite limit set on the funds that can be used for this purpose and efforts to boost the price above a reasonable maximum will result in curtailing the project.

These farms will be purchased and handled thru the Minnesota Rehabilitation corporation, a fed-

TWO IN RACE FOR REPRESENTATIVE IN MARSHALL CO.

Farmer-Laborites Endorse Emil Morberg of Big Woods Township

Two filings have been made for representative in the state legislature from Marshall county. The present incumbent Frank A. Green of Stephen, conservative, who has served for several terms, has announced that he will not be a candidate for re-election. Liberals point out that Mr Green's record of the last sessions where he voted 14 times wrong out of 15 roll calls in the regular session and five times wrong out of seven roll calls in the special session may have had some bearing on his decision not to be a candidate for reelection in a county which has always been in the liberal column on other offices.

The Marshall county farmer-labor convention held at Warren on Monday, April 13, endorsed Emil Morberg, Big Woods township farmer as the farmer-labor candidate from Marshall county. Mr. Morberg has served as county chairman of the farmer-labor association and is well known thruout the country as a thorough going liberal. He is one of the pioneers of the county, and president of the Farmers Union Oil company of Oslo. Following his endorsement, Mr. Morberg resigned his chairmanship in the association and the convention elected Nels M. Engen, Marshall county superintendent of school as county chairman.

Carl A. Johnson of Veda township filed for representative with the county auditor, Levi Johnson, Saturday. Mr. Johnson was born and has spent his entire life in Marshall county being one of the first white children born in Marshall county. He is a farmer and has served in many community positions being at the present time a member of the county wheat allottment committee.

Seeding is Started Thruout the State

Seeding operation started on the ridges in this territory this week with springs work expected to be in full swing thruout the entire section with the first of next week.

The ground is drying and warm- Scattered operations were reported from near Crookston. Plummer, and the east end of Pennington and the adjoining counties on Saturday ing remarkably fast considering the large amount of snow that fell last winter and much water has been absorbed by the ground with beneficial results for the ground water level and crop prospects.

The frost was comparatively shallow in spite of the hard and cold winter, many farmers report, and consequently the water went down rapidly. It is believed that much of the moisture reserve that has been lost the past several dry years have at least in part been replaced.

One Fourth of Youth Unemployed Reports Of Government Show

By M. B. Schnapper
Youth News Service Correspondent

Washington, D. C.—(YNS)—One out of every four young people in the United States are jobless and in despair, according to an official study just released.

The study, "Youth. . How Communities Can Help", is the first detailed analysis of youth's problems made by a government agency. It was prepared by the Committee on Youth Problems for the U. S. Office of Education.

It disclosed that of the 20,1000,000 persons 16 to 24 years of age, inclusive in the United States today:

4,700,000 are out of school, unemployed, and seeking jobs.

300,000 are out of school and unemployed but not seeking employment.

4,000,000 are in full-time schools and colleges.

500,000 without employment are taking part-time school work.

2,800,000 are young married women not employed and not in school.

7,800,000 are employed at full-time or part-time jobs.

The figure as to the number of young people who are employed at full-time or part-time work is 2,800,000 above the figures estimated by the Department of Labor in a recent report. The number of jobless young people today has increased 150 percent since 1930, when 2,000,000 young people were classified as unemployed, the committee finds.

But generally speaking the committee states, youth's plight is not new. Its report declares:

"Dislocation of youth antedates economic dislocation One evidence alone bears grim witness to this dislocation, the recruiting of youth into the ranks of crime. The majority age among the criminals has moved steadily downward until the peak of serious arrests is now at 19 years."

It is pointed out, however, that during the past six years youth has become the "surplus population".

Land Bank Cooperates With Soil Conservation

Several hundred farmers who are renting land bank farms in Minnesota will be encouraged to give prompt and thoughtful attention to the possibility of cooperating with the AAA in the new soil conservation program, it was announced this week by the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul.

Seed will be locally purchased where possible and furnished if necessary by the land bank to those worthy farmers who can come under the plan with advantage to themselves and to the farms, subject to an adjustment next fall when the payments are received, the land bank announced.

Payments expected to average more than $10 per acre in Minnesota for land shifted from corn, wheat, rye oats, barley, potatoes, or other "soil depleting" crops, up to a maximum of 15 per cent of the "soil depleting" acreage of each participating farm, are believed by the land bank to offer a strong inducement towards soil conservation. The crops to which such shifted acres would be devoted in order for the operator or owner to get the payments comprise soil conserving crops of many kinds, such as alfalfa, clover, and perennial grasses.

Approved crops taken out of the "soil depleting" acreage of each farm must in general be shifted to soil conservation this year in order to qualify for the payment and not be harvested or taken off for hay, although the land may be pastured, it was pointed out.

Of great importance in this part of the country is the other type of payment for carrying out certain "soil conserving practices", and the land bank believes that this will appeal strongly, as it provides a subsidy for those farms which could not well increase their acreages of legumes or other grasses.

Payments ranging from $1 to around $5 per acre are provided upon recommendation of the state committee and approval of the secretary of agriculture for such practices as liming land, planting and plowing under soybeans or cowpeas, planting trees on crop land, or for planting alfalfa or clover between October 1 1935 and September 30, 1936. The latter provision makes these payments available to many farmers who are now carrying on a rotation program but could not this year devote more of their land to soil conserving crops than has been their usual practice.

U. S. MILITARY DEFENSE BUDGET

The largest peace-time military defense bill in the history of the country passed the Senate by a vote of 53 to 12, on March 23, 1936. To the $545,226,318 recently voted by the House, the Senate added $66,136,286. The size of the Army is to be increased by 15,000 men and 1,300 officers, bringing our enlisted strength up to 165,000. The present enlisted strength is 118,750.

The bill also provides for an increase to 30,000 in the number of citizens at C M. T. C. camps, and an increase of 51 units of the R. O. T. C., with provisions for the training of Medical Corps units.

Fire Depts to be Trained to Handle Fires in Rural Area

Regional schools have been established at strategic points thruout Minnesota under supervision of Dewey W. Johnson, state fire marshal, to train fire departments, which are working with farmers of surrounding townships, how to properly handle equipment in fighting farm blazes under the 1927 cooperative state law.

The state fire marshal's department the past year has been mapping a concentrated program intended to minimize the number of farm fires by taking advantage of the fire equipment law, thereby reducing hazards to human life and helping reduce the cost of farm fire insurance.

Mr. Johnson, who also is deputy commissioner of insurance, announced that his department has established regional schools with instructors at Rochester, St. Cloud, Winona, New Ulm Detroit Lakes, Crookston, Moorhead, Bemidji, Keewatin, Rush City, Excelsior, and International Falls.

"The big question in farm fire fighting is water", Mr. Johnson asserted, "We have made a survey of the state in connection with Works Project 702 and determined that many farms have no cisterns, stock tanks, ponds or streams, and perhaps have only drilled wells

"To meet an emergency and to save buildings on a farm exposed to fire, the department is recommending a piece of apparatus mounted with a 300-gallon tank. This is sufficient to throw a stream of water under high pressure for 15 minutes without re-filling."

Under the plan worked out by the Fire Marshal's Department the apparatus, which involves an initial cost of from $5 to $6 per farm and is the only expense entailed to the farmer, is housed in the engine house of the nearest key city or village having an organized fire department, according to Mr. Johnson.

"The organized fire department, which has a trained personnel", asserted Mr. Johnson, "provides the manpower to properly fight and direct fires. It is very important that such cities or villages enter into the plan cooperatively with the farmers of the surrounding townships to fight farm fires.

"Through its regional schools and its instructors, the state fire marshal's department stands ready to train such fire departments in properly manning equipment and fighting farm fires, as are working out the plan with the farmers of the adjacent townships."

The importance of providing high-speed farm fire apparatus was stressed by Mr. Johnson. "It is vital", he explained, "that water be poured on the fire as soon as possible, because even though one building or stack may be totalled beyond control, the fire department appearing on the farm within five or ten minutes after the call is sent in, will be able to save the other exposed buildings such as farms, homes, and machine sheds."

"The new equipment", he explained further, "is equipped with modern life-saving devices, such as smoke masks, to go into a house and remove helpless people or save helpless stock, and with first-aid kits."

The department also is recommending that every farm in Minnesota install a modern fire pump can which can be used to fight a blaze while waiting for the farm fire apparatus to arrive. He also urged that every farm have a sturdily built ladder, painted bright red, hanging conspiculously in full view of anyone who drives onto the farm.

Federal Relief is Being Retrenched

Relief will be cut by about 50 percent for the coming fiscal year. Roosevelt has asked for only $2,100,000,000 compared with $4,880,000,000 last year. There is no guarantee that all of even this sum will be used, for there was about $1,000,000,00 unexpended of last year's appropriation. This sum carried forward actually appears in the advertised budget for relief for both years, giving the impression that $4,880,000,000 was the figure for last year (whereas $3,880,000 000, was actually used) and added to this year's budget, raising it to $3,000,000,000. The A. F. of L. estimates the unemployed now at 12,626,000; the Labor Research Association, 16,658,000. Roosevelt, having ended all direct relief and transferred federal funds to work relief, now promises to cut 700 000 off work relief.

High Spots on the Relief Map

Birmingham, where 75,000 to 80,000 cut off direct relief, face starvation, and where health officer has warned of disease resulting from children raiding garbage piles.

Omaha, where 27,000 denied relief are given apples, and where the farmers of the county are unable to obtain prices for farm produce sufficient to enable them to haul to market.

Harrisburg, Pa., where 275,000 on WPA jobs are scheduled to be fired June 1.

New York City, where 40,000 will be dropped from WPA.

Detroit, where 16,000 WPA workers are to be dropped.

A survey of such relief as is available, made by the American Association of Social Workers recently, shows in some states allotment for a family of 5 to be $2.25 for 2 weeks.

Drunken Driving Problem Tackled By New York Com.

By W. G. Calderwood

Mayor La Guardia of New York City appointed a commission which includes two doctors, two judges, a lawyer an insurance man, an assistant district attorney, and a police inspector, to tackle the baffling problem of the intoxicated driver. The first anomoly that they encountered was a statement by Charles Harnett, the state motor vehicle Commissioner, who quoted records which show that less than 1 per cent of the serious accidents of the state involved intoxicated drivers. Yet he insisted that "the drunken driver is the most serious menace on the highway" The answer to the riddle is the fact that there are grave difficulties in getting conclusive evidence upon which convictions of intoxication can be secured. This deters traffic officers from lodging the charge of drunken driving even when the condition is obvious. The records, therefore are very misleading. They not only fail to reveal the facts—they actually and grossly falsify them.

The mayor's commission believes that this difficulty may be largely avoided by changing the ordinance (and the statutes) to penalize a driver who is driving while "under the influence of alcohol", even tho he may not be intoxicated within the legal definition. This will make it possible legally to act on facts that have been fully established by painstaking tests which show that the drinker's judgment, and his physical reactions have been seriously impaired before he has reached a condition defined as "intoxicated" by the present legal interpretation. Such a scientific definition will enable a police doctor, who may not see the driver till an hour, or possibly two hours, after the accident, to testify with certointy whether at the time when the accident occurred the driver was "under the influence" to a degree that would impair his ability to drive safely.

Independent investigators have found that alcohol plays a part in from six to forty per cent of the serious traffic tragedies. It is heartening that the commission is confident it has evolved a plan that will make a substantial contribution to the solution of the vexatious problem.

SNOWBANK GOOD STORAGE FOR MONEY, BUT IT GIVES NO INTEREST

Mountain Lake—Stories are numerous about socks, teapots and even stoves being used as receptacles for money, but this spring brings the first one in which a snow drift was used as a safety-deposit vault. Last November 16, R. H. Junker sold a load of geese for $13. When he arrived home he found that his wallet containing the money from the transaction was missing. On Friday March 20 C. B. Friesen, while driving on a road north of Mountain Lake, saw the wallet protruding from a melting snow bank, where it had been pushed by a passing snow plow. There is a moral to this story. Inside the wallet was only the original $13—no interest.

ESTIMATES ARE APPARENTLY MEANINGLESS

Indications are that the cost of the enclosed skating rink will run far above the estimates. The quantity of cement required was estimated at 800 sacks, and up to the present we are informed that 2000 have been used with more to be needed that will bring the total up to 2400 sacks. The estimate placed the cost of the heating equipment at $800 and bid opened for this material at the last council meeting was $3,115.00. Wood rafters are to be substituted for steel in the roof structure in order to cut down costs. This would indicate that on some items at least, the cost is running as much as three to four hundred percent over the estimates. These are facts which reflect anything but creditably upon the engineering staff responsible for the drawing of the plans, specifications and figures.

Inasmuch as the skating rink is a foster-baby inherited by the present administration from a former, which became famous for its engineering feats, the situation does not arouse so much wonder. The SERA bills which have been stalking thru the council chamber at intervals like ghosts of a bygone age are the progeny of the same parents.

One may be led to ask, however, how long the mistakes of the past are to keep on bobbing up to disrupt the city's budget in the future.

MELBY AND DAY ARE ENDORSED

Representative J. O. Melby of Oklee and former representative Walter E. Day of Bagley were endorsed as candidates for the legislature by the 65th district farmer-labor convention at Oklee on Saturday.

In endorsing these men, the convention recognized the long record of service in the interests of the common people of this district that these two men have hung up. They are able, they are experienced and they are fearless. The people of this district have never been in doubt as to where they stand on issues that come before the legislature and a perusal of their records show that theirs is one of the finest, if not indeed the very best, of any district delegation in the lower house.

The next session of the legislature will no doubt witness the most stubborn efforts of the old guard to saddle upon the state vicious legislation, including the sales tax and it is to be hoped that this time there will not be enough voters in this district that can be misled to allow the old guard to get within grand larceny distance of election.

THE MIDDLE CLASS AND THE CRISIS

A study of the election returns in Minnesota two years ago, discloses that the farmers generally and the large city workers voted heavily farmer-labor, while the villages and small cities went strong against the farmer-labor ticket.

The reason generally assigned for the professional and business element's opposition to the farmer-labor ticket is the so-called radical platform of 1934. More correct would perhaps to say that their opposition was based upon what they were told the farmer-labor platform contained and demanded, for we have found that the percentage of business men and professional men who actually read the 1934 platform is infinitissimal. Added to that, it must be remembered that the great Middle Class; businessmen, professional men and white collar workers are more susceptible to Big Business propaganda than are other classes of society. They are the grist between the two millstones; the capitalists on top and the producers; workers and farmers on the bottom. And, between the two they are being ground exceedingly fine. They should bear in mind, however, that it is the pressure from the top that is killing them. The lower stone is static.
